Briand's Fine Speech
France Must Have Arms
What Italy Thinks
Extra, Two Dresses

—By Arthur Brisbane

Copyright, 1921, Star Company

Briand's speech at the conference yesterday was a real page in world history. Mr. Hughes' brotherly love speech that startled the conference was a pretty fairy story.

The world knows from Briand that France will not disarm, means to rely on force. Those that do not like it may lump it. On that score France will hear some plain, savage talk from Italy in the secret meetings, and talk, less savage, but as plain, from England.

Yesterday, following Briand's magnificently eloquent and hopelessly warlike address, England, Italy, Belgium, Japan and the United States spoke, politely, and said nothing definite. But—excepting Belgium—each speech carried to France a warning.

(Note: Ladies, read this first part patiently. Some dresses are described farther along.)

You agreed with every word of Briand's talk as you listened. Before you began to think.

He believed it all, will die believing it.

France is for peace. But first, be sure of your neighbors next door. We are not sure. Therefore we are armed.

There are two Germanys. One hard-working, honest, desiring peace, led by Chancellor Wirth, whom we respect as a man keeping his word loyally.

France seeks to help that Germany to establish democratic government.

There is also the Germany of the Hohenzollerns, of Moltke, and of Ludendorff. For that Germany we are ready with an army of a million men. When I speak they listen—because that army is back of me.

He quotes Moltke:

"Eternal peace is a dream, and not even a beautiful dream. War is established by God as part of the natural order of things, calling forth man's noblest qualities. Without war we should sink into gross materialism."

Briand quotes Ludendorff, fearing that Germany could again find salvation in her spiritual men. He, Briand, does not remind you that many great Frenchmen, including Napoleon—whom the French again worship—spoke of war as did Moltke.

He tells you that Germany, after a murderous war, has seven million trained soldiers ready to fight. Her national police of one hundred thousand men is made up of officers of the regular army.

Not under arms, but ready, Germany has an army bigger than France can assemble. Also Germany can turn her factories into guns and cannon fourteen hours a night. Her rich men have bought factories suitable for making weapons in Scandinavia and elsewhere, where France cannot register.

"France has no hatred in her heart, I say it here. But she has no right to weaken herself and thus encourage certain hopes across the Rhine."

Briand praises the indomitable courage of the German soldiers:

"We have fought them and know to what heights their courage and devotion to country can rise.

"A while ago great Russia, not dead, but with twenty million men that can be called to her army, tried to dash through Poland, with Germany beckoning to her. We had anxious moments then. What would happen to France, to Europe, if anarchistic Russia joined hands with revengeful Germany, and with success?"

Changing to the second person singular, addressing America, he asked:

"What wouldst thou do if, situated as France is, thou wert asked to go unarmed?" Every American citizen says he would answer, "Jamais de la vie"—never in life.

Europe is called at peace, but there are fumerolles, smoke holes, everywhere, that tell of fire beneath.

Briand talked through Hughes at Balfour, who speaks and understands French, as our delegates do not, although Senator Lodge looks wonderfully knowing almost at the right time.

Briand reached the high point of his speech and preached a sermon in patriotism that some of our statesmen need, when he said: "I work for peace, but if too optimistic, I should see my country attacked, I should be an abominable traitor."

Briand's theory is that a Frenchman should worry first about France.

America and England were told: "If our former Allies offered to share our danger with us we could cut down our army, but if France is to be alone, you must not haggle with us about our plans to retain security."

Later Balfour and Hughes hemmed and hawed some nice meaningless platitudes in reply to that.

Balfour said that to think of "moral isolation" for France would be "a tragedy," and Hughes said "no words spoken by France have ever fallen on deaf ears in the United States." But you can't make much out of that.

Balfour and Hughes know that vague talk could not conscript men again for any army to fight with France—and both made it clear that any new war starting would be closely scrutinized before any one joined up.

Briand's last words were:

"Under the circumstances France cannot do otherwise." Meaning that she could not forego an army of nearly a million men.

Briand goes home this week. He will take bitter thoughts with him.

Girls in Arbuckle Case Change Testimony

MOVE TO IMPEACH JUDGE PIERCE

REMOVAL ASKED IN JORDAN'S PETITION

Wakefield Representative Files Request to Have House Act on Case

A petition asking the removal of Justice Edward P. Pierce of the Supreme Judicial Court was filed with the clerk of the House of Representatives today by Representative Loring P. Jordan of Wakefield.

The petition filed by Representative Jordan asks for the removal of Justice Pierce on advices of the Governor to the Governor and Council, under the authority granted by Chapter 6, Article 8, of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

This chapter provides that a judge may sit in his office for life, during good behavior.

It provides that the House may act as a grand inquest in cases where good behavior is question; that it may hear evidence and then submit its findings to the Senate.

The Senate then passes on the facts submitted, and if it finds the judge guilty sends an address to the Governor and council asking his removal.

In one of the most sensational proceedings in the history of the Boston courts, Justice Pierce, Attorney-General J. Weston Allen and Attorney W. Edwin Ulner were indicted by the Suffolk County Grand Jury on Nov. 18.

The indictments were secret, and when they were disclosed the legal profession of Boston was shaken. Justice Pierce was indicted following lengthy John Doe proceedings which came about from charges made in connection with litigation between the Wahan Rose Conservatory and the Henry A. Wood Sons Company, both of Wellesley.

Justice Pierce was alleged to have conspired with Attorney Ulner to obstruct the due administration of justice "by causing, procuring and inducing one Charles S. Hill, a master duly appointed by the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts" a report contrary to the facts as found by said Hill.

Justice Pierce was unable to respond in court to the indictment because of illness that kept him to his bed.

PENSIONED FIREMAN ACCUSED

Daniel T. Callahan Makes Vigorous Denial of Candidate's Statement

Daniel T. Callahan, head of the International Investigating Agency, at No. 110 State street, was accused by Former Mayor James M. Curley, at a noon rally today, of being employed in the Boston fire department by John R. Murphy as a "spy."

Callahan immediately replied, hurling the short and ugly word at Curley and declaring that he will seek court action to make the former Mayor prove his statements.

Callahan, who is a pensioned former member of the Boston fire department, in addition to branding as false the statement of the former mayor, accused Curley of going to his home one night back in 1902 or 1903 and attempting to "black-jack" from him money that had been collected among the firemen for legal services in connection with legislative attempts then being made to bring about a two-platoon system in the Boston department.

At that time, said Callahan, Curley was a member of the legislature.

DEMANDED FUND.

"Curley then posed as a friend of the firemen," continued Callahan, "and was handling in the Legislature a two-platoon bill. At Curley's request money was collected by the men of the fire department to be turned over to me for his (Curley's) services.

"The committee of firemen, knowing that he was not on the level," continued Callahan, "gave the money in part to me for legal services such as would be required in presenting the claims.

"Curley was not satisfied," said

Will Dr. Eldridge A. Atwood, confessed slayer of Dr. Wilfred E. Harris, and chief figure in Boston's most sensational love triangle tragedy, spend Thanksgiving in the cell where he has passed five years, or will he be once more a free man?

This question was before the Governor's Council at a special meeting today.

The State Board of Parole has recommended that Dr. Atwood's life sentence be commuted to seven years.

The council will decide whether he will be pardoned at once.

Little doubt is felt at the State House that Dr. Atwood will be pardoned. An effort is being made to get him out before Thanksgiving.

CURLEY CHARGES MURPHY USED PENSIONED FIREMAN AS SPY

'FALSE,' REPLIES MAN NAMED BY THE CANDIDATE

and one occasion at about midnight, he and two accompanied by two others came to Charlestown, where I was living and attempted to 'black jack' me into giving him the money collected. I absolutely refused, as I was working in behalf of old friends and comrades in the department. And the department then as now, thoroughly understood that Curley, to use a slang expression, was known as 'Klondiker' or 'Gold seeker.'

"His record since then," continued Callahan, "can be proved and varifies my statements."

NOT HIRED BY MURPHY.

These rally at which the former mayor accused Callahan of being employed as Murphy's "spy" was held at Massachusetts avenue and Southampton street. It was there that Curley declared that Callahan was used as a "spy" for the purpose of "weakening the morale" of the firemen.

"I never was employed by Mr. Murphy to do any kind of work in the department," said Callahan. "And, although a close personal friend of Murphy, I would not have done it if he had asked me. I have always opposed that kind of work and when a member of the department I wrote articles against such practices."

In his accusation at the noon rally Curley stated that the money paid Callahan for his "spy" work in the department was paid to one J. E. Bowers. He pointed out that Bowers collected the money for Callahan, because Callahan was not allowed to collect because he was a retired pensioned member of the department.

BOWERS EMPLOYED.

Callahan denied this also, and stated that Bowers had formerly been in the office of the district attorney at New York and was well acquainted with the practices and the peoples of the underworld, grafters and the like.

"He was employed by Murphy through me," said Callahan, "in order to give Murphy knowledge of this class of men if they were attempting to bomb fire stations or cause trouble."

"Bowers, to my knowledge," said Callahan, "never entered an engine house during the strike trouble or reported or stated any conversation of any member of the department. His work was to get information to be used in case radicals got busy in Boston."

Callahan says he was the first private in the department to be elected president of the Firemen's Mutual Protective Association. He is a former soldier, having enlisted in the army at the age of fourteen years, and having taken part in the Apache campaign in 1880-1881 in New Mexico and Arizona.

Is Lady Nicotine becoming less popular?

Is the big reduction in Federal collections the result partly of crusades by anti-cigarette boomers?

Only $135,405,000 was paid into the treasury by revenue collectors this year on sales of cigarette tobacco tax stamps. Last year the revenue from this source amounted to $151,494,000.

Mrs. Edwards said: "It would not be consistent, having been elected at Kansas City as national vice-commander of the Women's Legion Auxiliary, to take, in addition, the leadership of the Massachusetts branch of the Legion. The duties of the national vice-president will be all that I can assume, not only on account of justice to the work, but my health will not permit the double duties."

GIRL OF 13 WAS DAN HANNA'S 'SHADOW'

Millionaire's Love for Daughter Responsible for His Failure to Wed Again

New York, Nov. 22.—"My father called me his shadow, I followed him so much. I loved him very much and he loved me that much, and that's why he didn't get married again."

Thirteen-year-old Ruth Hanna, daughter of the late Dan R. Hanna, millionaire and sportsman, explained in the simple language of a child just why it was that Hanna broke off his engagement to June A. Evans, the actress, a few months before he died.

It also explained why he did not leave the balance of his fortune to the young woman, who was to have become his fifth wife, and why his little daughter, rather than the actress, got his magnificent estate, "The Croft."

"When I heard my father was going to be married again," continued Ruth, "I was very sad. For then I couldn't be his housekeeper and get to be an actress and make a lot of money to give to poor people. I couldn't be his shadow any more.

"So I told him once while I was visiting him that I didn't like it. And he promised me that he wouldn't marry anybody and that he was going to give me 'The Croft,' and that we were going to live there."

Little Ruth also disclosed that she had been engaged in a crusade to convert her father to Catholicity, the faith in which she was reared, and that shortly before he died he expressed a desire to meet a priest who was a friend of his little girl.

Probe Strange Death of Film Actress In Los Angeles

By Associated Press

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 22.—The authorities today were investigating the death of Countess Du Cella, 45 years old, film actress, who was found dead in her apartments Sunday night.

The investigation, it was stated, would centre about empty phials said by the police to have been found near the body.

Westminster, followed the suicide of Dr. Celia Paine Adams, a pupil and admirer of Dr. Harris. With the murder the whole story of the affair was made public.

Dr. Atwood, himself an osteopath, was deeply in love with Dr. Adams. Again and again he asked her to marry him, but she put him off by saying something about her New England conscience preventing such a marriage.

At last he wrung from her lips a story involving Dr. Harris.

Parting after this confession, and promising to marry Dr. Atwood and start life anew, she went to her office in Brookline and took poison. She died with Dr. Atwood at her bedside.

Mad with grief, Dr. Atwood secured a razor and a revolver, and sought Dr. Harris, planning to disfigure him.

Instead the murder took place. After the shooting Dr. Atwood went to Newspaper row, read the story of his crime on the bulletin boards, went to a moving picture show and then gave himself up to the police.

BOYCOTT MAY LOWER PRICE OF TURKEYS

State Commission Says High Cost Due to Speculation and Attempt to Recoup Losses

Lower prices for Thanksgiving turkey should prevail. Boston housekeepers are boycotting the market, and this will force a drop in the price within forty-eight hours.

This is the opinion of the State Commission on the Necessaries of Life, which today reported the result of its investigation of the exhorbitant prices charged for turkeys.

There is a large supply of turkeys now in the country, according to the report. In spite of the fact that food prices generally have gone down, and the price of corn, the principal food for turkeys, has dropped from 89 to 69 cents a bushel, the price of turkeys is about the same as it was a year ago.

Boston housekeepers have become so indignant over the exhorbitant prices for the birds that they are now boycotting the market, according to the reports of dealers. If present high prices persist they will serve as a boomerang for both farmers and jobbers, who will suffer serious losses.

If the boycott continues through Wednesday, a lot of the birds will be held over until Christmas, when prices will fall rapidly.

The Commission does not fix the blame for the high prices entirely on either farmers or jobbers. Speculative activities have been stimulated among both farmers and jobbers by the wide publicity on the turkey market.

It is possible, the report continues, that the present high prices are the result of an attempt to recuperate losses on the large stocks of turkey now in cold storage.

ARBUCKLE ORGY IS DESCRIBED BY GIRLS

ing when the star guest of the party lay writhing and screaming upon a tumbled bed were re-created before the mental eye of the courtroom.

At the start it was the prosecution's day, with its two star witnesses ready to tell the circumstances attending the injury which deprived the beautiful screen girl of her life. But cross-examination elicited so many interpretations of the happenings in those rooms at the St. Francis Hotel that the effect left upon the jury is problematical.

After two doctors had testified to bruises on the body of the dead girl, Miss Prevost was called to the stand. Under the questioning of Leo Friedman for the prosecution she related in detail the circumstances of Miss Rappe's injury, together with what transpired before and after this occurrence.

DESCRIBES FATAL SCENE.

Her description of the party was perfunctory until she came to the point where Arbuckle opened the door of Room 1219 after he had been in there a half hour with Miss Rappe.

"What was Miss Rappe doing when you entered the room?"

"She was moving around and saying, 'I'm dying, I'm dying.'"

Then followed the administration of bicarbonate of soda, which made Miss Rappe ill. The lifting from the bed into the cold bath and the return of the girl to the other bed in the room was then described.

At this point came the testimony around which may be said to have centered the entire effect of the day on the jury.

"What, if anything, did you hear Miss Rappe say in the presence of this defendant concerning the cause of her injury?"

The witness hesitated—"She was screaming with pain and she said 'He hurt me; he hurt me.'"

TOLD GIRL TO SHUT UP.

"What did Arbuckle say or do?"

"He said, 'Oh, shut up or I'll throw you out the window.'"

"And then," said Mr. Friedman, "what else did he do? Did he approach the young lady?"

"Yes, he did."

"And what did he do? Just tell us what he did?"

"He took a piece of ice and he put it on her body."

"And what did he say when he placed the ice there?"

"He said, 'That'll make her come to.'"

That was Miss Prevost's story and it was substantially the same as that of Alice Blake, given later. If it had been left there it would have been a terrific indictment of the defendant and tremendously damaging to his chances of acquittal.

But cross-examination tore it to shreds and tatters. Gavin McNab, chief counsel for Arbuckle, began to attack, not on the testimony, but on the circumstances surrounding Miss Prevost's appearance on the witness stand.

WITNESS THREATENED.

He elicited from the witness the number of times she had been questioned by the district-attorney's office. He forced her to admit she had changed her statements four times and he ended up this line of questioning with these questions:

"And after you had repudiated before the grand jury what you had told them they took you out that night to the district-attorney's office and threatened you with prison unless you signed the statement they wanted you to sign?"

"Yes."

"And the next morning you signed the statement?"

"Yes."

McNab then rose to his feet and made a demand on the district attorney for a copy of the grand jury testimony of Miss Prevost. It was resisted by U'Ren, and a hot argument developed in which McNab declared:

"I propose to show that they gave this girl the third degree; that they took her to the very door of the jail and told her they would lock her up unless she said what they wanted her to say. I propose to show that the words, 'He hurt me,' are a compromise, agreed after this witness refused absolutely to swear that Miss Rappe said, 'He killed me,' which was what they wanted her to say.

REFUSED TO SAY "KILL."

"I propose to show that they tried five times before the grand jury to make her say those words and that she refused to say them."

McNab got the transcript and it was read to the jury. It showed she had changed her testimony four times about this point, the most vital in all her testimony, and that finally she consented to say, 'Miss Rappe said 'he hurt me.'" The word "hurt," wherever it occurred in the grand jury transcript, was substituted for the word "kill," which had been crossed out, indicating a change of mind on the part of the witness.

During the reading of the part where U'Ren tried and failed to get Miss Prevost to remember that she had just told him, upstairs in his office, that Miss Rappe had said "He killed me" the defence counsel looked triumphant while the witness and counsel for the prosecution appeared unhappy.

"No, she did not say 'he killed me,'" the witness insisted.

"She said: 'I'm dying, I'm dying, and that's all she said."

MOONSHINE MAKER GIVEN STIFF SENTENCE

George Martes of Wellington lane, Lexington, who was arrested by the Lexington police after they had raided his house and found thirteen quarts of good "moonshine" whiskey, was fined heavily in the District Court at Concord by Judge Prescott Keyes, who found him guilty on two counts. For selling intoxicating liquor his case was placed on file, but he paid $100 as costs, and for keeping liquor and exposing it for sale, he was given a thirty-day sentence in the House of Correction and a $60 fine in addition, both the sentence and fine being suspended until July 13, 1922.

COURT HOLDS BOTH GOODMAN AND HIS WIFE INNOCENT OF WRONG

RESERVES DECISION ON CASE

Worcester, Nov. 22—Disregarding the sensational charges and counter-charges which figured in the suit for separate maintenance brought by Mrs. Yetta Goodman against Harry Goodman, ladies' tailor, Judge Frederick H. Chamberlain declared at the conclusion of the testimony that he was satisfied neither husband nor wife had been guilty of immorality.

Judge Chamberlain reserved decision on the case, which has been underway for weeks and has attracted a great deal of attention in Worcester county.

Mrs. Goodman had accused her husband of too much friendliness for a nurse, and told of various compromising situations in which she found them.

Goodman, the ladies' tailor, countered by accusing his wife of encouraging the attentions of Harry Soccolo, a neighbor. He said he had to move to put an end to his neighbor's attentions to his wife.

BUSINESS HURT.

The tailor, inconsulting his testimony, declared that as a result of the publicity he was getting his business had dwindled from $5,000 a year to not more than $1,800. He denied that he ever slapped his wife, or expressed a desire to kill her like a dog.

Other late testimony was to the effect that Mrs. Goodman once called Special Justice Jacob Asbur of the Central Court a "big bum" and that she had a weakness for so describing persons to whom she had taken a dislike.

The accusation came in the testimony of Miss Frances J. Ethrain, a bookkeeper, in the employ of Goodman, she was called to the stand to testify in her employer's behalf.

Miss Ethrain stated that Mrs. Goodman had come to the office of Goodman and had asked her, (Miss Ethrain), to stop working for Goodman, because so many people were leading him astray.

GIRL CLERK INSULTED.

Miss Ethrain testified that she remained despite the plea of Mrs. Goodman, and that Mrs. Goodman again came to the office and called her names. Miss Ethrain also stated that Mrs. Goodman told her: "Take Asher as a big bum."

Miss Ethrain testified that one day Mrs. Goodman came into the office of her husband with a new hat, and that when Goodman spoke of the hat Mrs. Goodman replied: "You don't have to worry, Soccolo is paying for it."

The Soccolo referred to is Harry Soccolo, whom Goodman accuses of having caused trouble between him and his wife. Goodman charges that he was forced to change his residence because of Soccolo.

NURSE'S FATHER TESTIFIES.

Frank Kessler, the father of Jennie Kessler, a nurse who has been accused by Mrs. Goodman of being intimate with Goodman, was called to the stand and testified that he had told Mrs. Goodman to "get rid of Soccolo."

John E. Kenney, a Worcester lawyer, also testified that Mrs. Goodman came out of the Goodman home one day as he and Judge Asher and Goodman were leaving for an auto trip to Boston, and called them "three big bums."

The Goodman case has caused a sensation in Worcester. Startling accusations have been brought against Goodman by his wife. She charged that Goodman maintained Jennie Kessler, a nurse, at their home for six months.

SIX RESCUED AT SEA AS GALE SINKS SHIP

Captain and Crew of Schooner Vogue Rescued in Gale Off the Grand Banks

Battered by Atlantic gales and bringing with her the skipper and five members of the crew of the Newfoundland schooner Vogue, picked out of the sea as their ship was sinking under them off the Grand Banks, the Norwegian steamship Elida Klausen came limping into Boston Harbor today.

Her plates were so encrusted and the salt rime covered her bridge and even her funnel. Her ventilators and her lifeboats were smashed and her men worn out by long days and nights of fighting the sea for the safety of ship and cargo.

The story of the rescue of the men of the Vogue was told by Captain George Yarn, the 54-year-old captain of the vessel, who declared it the most seamanlike performance he had ever seen—and despite his few years, Captain Yarn is a good judge of such things.

"The Vogue left Quirpoon harbor, away to the north of Newfoundland, on Nov. 11," explained the skipper, "We had several thousand quintals of salt fish under the hatches and were bound for Gibraltar and nearby ports.

"Three days later the schooner ran into the tail end of a northwest gale that instead of dying down increased in strength and fury steadily. That night James Leblanint, 22 years old, one of the crew, was washed over the side.

"He was in heavy oil skins and sea boots, but we could see him clinging to a bit of wreckage, and two of our men, Purkley Power and Allen Harrett, launched the flimsy dory in firewood that went floating to leeward, leaving the two men floundering in the water near the ship's starboard quarter. We threw them lines, and they scrambled back on deck again, but through no fault, but unharmed.

"Tolaintint drifted away in the dark and we never saw him again. He was a schoolmate of mine and had been on a lot of voyages with me.

"That night we sounded the well and found that the Vogue was taking in water fast. We began lightening the cargo and the fact that the salt fish dripped brine, together with the furious seas, brought to us a most pretty soon she was leaking badly.

"We manned the two pumps before midnight that night and from then until the time the Klausen hove in sight we were at it constantly. Anybody who has never had to pump against a rising leak in bitter cold and with the sea ever side coming closer and closer to you every hour, can know what those four days were to us.

"Twice we tried to claw back to land and twice we found that the strain was too much for the schooner, and that her seams opened faster than when she was running before the gale.

"Then every time we tried to set sail, the wind would rip it out of the bolt ropes before it fairly filled. In all we lost a complete set of eight sails, and it was the last time a ship was so low in the water and wallowing so that it was impossible to get below decks and break out new sails.

"We had lost the dinghy, as I said, and the second boy of the crew, a comber caught us astern and smashed the big life boat that was lashed in the after taffrail.

"That left us with nothing to do but fight for the ship to the last.

"We were almost exhausted when, on the night of November 17, with a heavy snowstorm blowing, we saw the Klausen came in sight.

"I did not have much hope that she could help us, for the seas were breaking over by this time, the wind was higher than ever and, to make matters worse, there was a cross chop to the waves that made it almost hopeless to launch a boat. However, I sent up rockets and burned flares."

The Klausen saw my signals and, despite the weather, managed to launch a lifeboat in charge of Ralph Hanzle, first mate of the steamship. They had a fearful fight with the sea, but managed to get alongside the sinking Vogue and take us off, one at a time. Half an hour later the Vogue sank."

With Captain Yarn were John Kimberly, mate; Purkley Power, boatswain, Thomas Yarn, brother of the skipper, cook, Allin Barrett and Ralph Yarn, a cousin of the captain, seaman.

The Vogue was built four years ago. Captain Yarn took command of her on his twenty-first birthday. He had made three trips to Europe, two down to Italy, three times to Spain and has made a number of shorter voyages in the craft.

Mildred Harris Holds No Grudge Against Charles Chaplin

Actress, During Boston Visit, Says She Is Still "Fond" of Her Famous Ex-Husband "As a Friend"

By HAZEL CANNING.

Mildred Harris, beautiful former wife of Charles Chaplin, great man of filmdom, is in town. And Mildred Harris, though the divorced wife of the already mentioned Chaplin, is by no means "sore" at Charlie. Now, in most cases, when feeling changes, between two people whom the minister or the justice of the peace have joined together, all to no abiding purpose, as the divorce judge can bear witness later on, in most cases—the lady, or the gentleman, one or both, talk interestingly and with vim, of the former partner's shortcomings.

Drama starts, full often, when dear former wife of his bosom, or beloved erstwhile lovely bunch of femme, develops eloquence on the man or the woman I married and divorced. Not so with Mildred Harris. She is original. And she bears no grudges. Rather she is all thankfulness, all gratitude, all fondest affection, toward Mr Charlie Chaplin. In fact she said she was, in the days when the affairs of the Bowdoin Theatre, where she is appearing every day this week, and who may say why not,

"Do I hate Charlie Chaplin? Do I hold a grudge against him? By no means no. I am still friends—a friend you know, of Mr. Chaplin. I still am grateful to him, very grateful to him, in fact, for all he did for me. Now Mr. Chaplin is eccentric"—this is as far as his former wife will proceed against him—"he is eccentric, but he is a wonderful man. He taught me my philosophy."

HER PHILOSOPHY.

Then the little lady, the listless little lady, threw off her thousand dollar wrap, and drew it on again, and dipped into philosophy. Philosophy, as in drama and a stage star—founding a career.

Dipped, in this wise. "Just because I suffered great sorrow, as the wife of Mr. Chaplin, just because I knew great loss, in the death of my baby, whom I loved so dearly, I just cannot talk about it; just because I know heartache and despair, and why, is the reason why I should lay these at Mr. Chaplin's door. I would be stupid if I did. I do not. I am thankful, in great life and great love, not vouchsafed to all, thank you, but to me.

"To be sure I have traveled through the valley of the shadow of childbirth, and, I repeat, I suffered, have reaped, in sorrow, that training of heart and brain and spirit which can come to man or woman in no other way. Then were I very blind indeed not to be grateful for the experiences I have known, in any but a willing spirit.

"Actresses can really achieve heights of feeling, in her profession, if she has not known great sorrow, or dying—joy and pain, in her own private life. It seems sordid to translate your own griefs into your own professional life, but such has been the history of artists, since drama began, and so it will go on.

"Burns wrote great poems of great feeling, only after he had lived through the pain of which he wrote. Whistler painted his great masterpieces only after he had horribly loved the ethereal Lady Hamilton. So it is also of women, I suppose. For it is better to be a happy home woman than to be a great artist, but to be a great artist, with fame and fame on the ashes of your happiness, is the part of me cowardly I have. And it is as a brave woman, and a great artist, indeed, that I have ambition to be known.

The little lady rested a minute, as her intelligent eyes, clear, in all gratitude and devotion. Then Miss Harris, in a few short moments, disposed of the subject of Chaplin and marriage and art.

"I don't approve of two actors marrying," said she. "To all marriages there needs to be one active and one—perhaps I might say—passive, partner. That is, one needs to be the sympathizer, the foil, for the other. But marry two people, both artists, of one of the most exacting professions in the world, and you generally sow the seeds of discord.

"Now I am very positive in my preference for marriages between persons of the same age. Mr. Chaplin was so old—Now listen, you good people, to what the little lady calls old!—

CHARLIE TOO OLD.

"For," as she continued, "Mr. Chaplin was thirty-two years of age. That is much too old for me. So now I am trying to be a good sport, to live life and about marriage. And to take what life has come to me, and to put it into riches of life and riches of the spirit. And not to fret, but to live on, working and hoping and helping."

Now ask the little lady one portentous question, and she hedges. Here's the question:

"Is it true—is it positively, absolutely true—that you never—and you will marry again?"

At last, after some pause, the first smile through the whole talk. "Oh—pardon me if I do not answer that. My art is long and life is long and the adventure—and—and—well—when we are brave voyagers all, who can say what is waiting for us, just around the sunlit corner?"

ARMS PARLEY BLOCKS PLAN FOR LARGER JAP NAVY

try's readiness to content itself with the 5-5-3 standard.

American and foreign officials who conferred at the State Department on the Japanese armament claims were today joined by Senator Lodge, Republican, Admiral Coontz, Rear-Admiral W. C. Pratt of the General Navy Board, Admiral Rate and two technical advisers for Japan. Secretary of State Hughes and Arthur J. Balfour sat in at these conferences for short periods.

Acting on reports received from Captain Edward H. Watson, United States naval attache at Tokyo, the American naval experts were able to refute the Japanese arguments for increased fighting strength.

Japanese claim that the battleship Mutsu to be scrapped is actually in good condition, Captain Watson reported, was quoted to show that this vessel was not to be commissioned until December 1.

Japan's bid for more light cruisers was also finally ruled out yesterday. The delegates advanced the argument that inasmuch as Japan had none of vessels of this class either built or building, the reduction of her navy from 81 units of 431,000 tons to 270,000 tons entailed a severe cut in light cruisers. The American experts held that because of the great number of light cruisers now in use abroad, Japan's quota was raised down the tonnage she is entitled to by mathematical adhesion to the official data.

It was authoritatively stated on behalf of Great Britain last night that the British imperial delegates have reached a "tual agreement with the Americans on the 5-5-3 ratio. They are also agreed on the ten-year holiday, although the British naval advisers have now laid before the American experts a series of highly technical calculations showing how difficulties will arise in the replacement of ships after the expiration of the holiday. General discussion is now proceeding on these points in the committee of experts.

The committee on Pacific and Far Eastern questions discussed a series of resolutions prepared for their consideration by Senator Root, setting forth the general principles to guide the committee in its further investigations in regard to China, which after full discussion and amendment were adopted in the following form:

1—To respect the sovereignty, the independence and the territorial administrative integrity of China.

2—To provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity to China to develop and maintain for herself an efficient and stable government.

3—To use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principles of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China.

4—To refrain from taking advantage of the present conditions in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of the subjects or citizens of friendly states and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such states. The committee adjourned to meet at 11 o'clock today.

A British spokesman described the resolutions as "merely a review of the position of the powers with regard to the policy which they undertake to pursue in China. A series of resolutions cannot supersede anything."

The only serious doubt which arose in the various circles today in regard to the four resolutions relates to the insertion of the phrase in resolution 1, "throughout the territory of China." The Chinese delegation insist that it embraces the five integral parts of the Chinese Republic—China proper, Manchuria, Mongolia, Tibet and Chinese Turkestan. The Japanese adhere firmly to their intention not to engage in any discussion directed toward their expulsion from Manchuria.

Reinforcement for the Chinese delegation complained that the four resolutions did not cover all the principles laid down in the ten points submitted last week. They also object to the failure of the committee to have all treaties laid on the table and received by the conference. The Chinese deplored, too, that no action has been taken towards checking up on a treaty signed by China in the Far East affecting Japan's future actions.

Naval Agreement on All but Details Seems Near

Washington, Nov. 22.—On the American proposals for limitation of naval armament, discussions have been exchanged among the arms delegates with such unprecedented directness that some of the experienced diplomatists here believe they can soon sit down to sign a treaty. Many hard knocks will not be possible to accomplish.

With the respective heads of the American, British and Japanese delegations working in direct personal conference almost daily on the naval reduction plan, there are indications that an agreement on all but details is near at hand.

All indications point to an "understanding" rather than a treaty as the form to be taken by the final Far Eastern agreement. Diplomatically, such an instrument would be classed along with the "gentlemen's agreements" of the post regarding China and would not require Senate confirmation.

There have been hints that the naval reduction agreement might also bring that form, but that is said to be a detail which will have to be adjusted.

Comparison of China's bill of rights with the four principles adopted by the Conference discloses that the latter cover only two and a half of the ten points presented in Hughes' statement.

Handling is being kept in the closest touch with the progress of the Conference. Senator Lodge is seeing the President as often as twice a day.

UPHAM'S CORNER WINS ITS FIGHT FOR SEWER

Residents of Upham's Corner, Dorchester, today won their long fight for better sewer service. After a hearing, Mayor Peters instructed the commissioner of public works to advertise for bids for a new sewer on Humphrey street, Upham's Corner, which the petitioners said would take care of the situation.

For years, they told the mayor, water had been backing up into cellars in time of flood and the condition was growing worse. The improvement will cost the city $40,000.

SAUGUS HUNTS 'WILD GIRL' IN WOODS

Scouts Aid Search Near Scene of Mysterious Murder 22 Years Ago

Who is the young girl with long, silky hair streaming down her back, one stocking dangling around her shoe top, and a look of half-clad, who has run screaming through the woods at intervals during the past few days in the vicinity of the Breakhart Farm in North Saugus, the scene of a gruesome murder twenty-two years ago?

One hundred Saugus and South Saugus men are in search for the mystery woman who has startled men who have come across her and terrorized women who have caught fleeting glimpses as she appeared in a little clearing and then, like a startled fawn, raced screaming through the underbrush to her hiding place.

The "wild girl of Saugus" has Saugus literally "by the ears." Corbett's variety show, the general meeting place for North Saugus, is discussing nothing else. The strange young woman has been seen by a number of people. And while the women folk have come to every word, the men discuss the woman's motives and why she's taken up her abiding place in the woods.

OUTDISTANCED M.I.

So tense has become the situation that mothers are afraid to allow their young daughters or sons to even step to the corner after supper, and they themselves refuse to go out where unless accompanied by their husbands.

Men have even chased the apparition, but the girl said to be about twenty years old, has outdistanced them all and vanished completely.

Chief Roland L. Mansfield of the Saugus police again today detailed several officers to beat the woods against the fair Scouts.

An idea of the interest that the mystery woman has created is gleaned from the fact that a rosy-cheeked youth, wearing his Boy Scout uniform, trudged from Lynn to Saugus Centre, a four-mile hike, and reported that he was the nearest police station today to join the search.

DISCUSSED CASE.

It was still very early, the night police had left their beats and the chief had not arrived, so the lad contented himself by discussing the case during the wood, in an effort to find the woman's hiding place.

Breakhart Farm, where the search is concentrating, is one of 600 acres, owned by the estate of the late Joseph

PEACE OR WAR?

Studies at the Washington Conference

NO. 11.

FRANCE IN THE LIMELIGHT.

Washington, Nov. 22.—The first session of the Washington conference featured, as the Cinematograph people say, President Harding and Mr. Secretary Hughes; the second day was Mr. Balfour's day. The third was the session of M. Briand, was the session of M. Briand.

The four personalities contrast very strikingly. President Harding from a stately figure, making a very noble oration in the best American fashion; Mr. Hughes was hard, exact, clear-cut, gathering and explicit; Mr. Balfour, slender and stooping, silvery-haired and urbane, with a delightful accent and a prompt speech with a care that left no ragged end to a sentence, and no gap for apologies.

All three are taller and neater men than M. Briand, whose mane of hair flows back from his face in leonine style, whose mobile face and fluent gestures reinforce the nitrous notes of his wonderful voice. His eloquence was so great that many a Congressman in the gallery above, quite innocent of French, was moved to applause by the sheer grace and music of the performance.

Eloquence That Could Not Save Day.

Eloquence could not save the day or the occasion. M. Briand spoke to a gathering that was amazed and with scepticism for the cause he had to plead. I watched the quiet, scrutinizing countenances of the men who he turned about to face as he spoke. Root, Lodge and Hughes, as impassive as judges, Balfour trying to look like a sympathetic ally in the face of a discourse that insultingly ignored Great Britain as a factor of the European situation, Lord Lee, obstinately grey, Senator Pomerene, Golf, with that faintly smiling face of his, the mask of the believer.

The voice of the orator rose and fell, boomed at them, pleaded, sought to stir them—he was breaking over rocks. He was to implacable faces, hardly or faintly, retained the effect of listening with special pleader, doing his best, his feamy best, with an intolerably bad case.

M. Briand put before the conference one definite proposals at all. After Mr. Hughes, with that masterful economy of his, had terminated by "we promise to accept," M. Briand was an undefensible. France proposes to accept nothing. France does not know how to scrap. She learns nothing and forgets nothing. It is her supreme misfortune.

He explained the position of France in a melodious discourse of apologetics and evasion. The French contribution to the disarmament conference is that France has not the slightest intention of disarming. She is reducing her term of service with the colors from three years to two. In a Europe of untrained men, this is not disarmament but economy.

England Ignored As Unimportant.

The great feature of M. Briand's discourse was his pretense of the absolute unimportance of England in European affairs. France, for whom, as Mr. Balfour in a few words of infinite gentleness reminded M. Briand, France, for whom the British empire lost a million dead—very nearly as many as France herself lost—France, to whose rescue from German attack came Britain, Russia and presently Italy and America, France, as M. Briand declared, was alone in the world, friendless and terribly menaced by Germany and Russia.

And on the nonsensical assumption of French isolation, all unfolded a case that was either—I hesitate to consider what—and how shall I put that old adjective?—deficient in its estimate of reality, or else—not special pleading.

The plain fact of the case is that France is maintaining a vast army in the face of a disarmed world, and she is preparing energetically for fresh warlike operations in Europe and for war under sea against Great Britain.

To excuse this line of action, M. Briand unfolded a fabulous account of the German preparation for a renewal of hostilities: every minister in the small force of troops allowed to Germany is an officer or non-commissioned officer, so that, practically the German army can expand at any moment to millions, and Germany is not morally disarmed because Ludendorff—M. Briand quoted him at some length—is still writing and talking militant nonsense.

Admits Government of Germany Is Honest.

Even M. Briand has to admit that the present German government is honest and well meaning, but it is a weak government. It is not its real thing. The real Germany is the Germany necessary to Lloyd George's argument, and behind Germany is Russia.

He conjured up a great phantom of Soviet Russia, which would have conquered all Europe but for the French army and Poland, the iniquitous attack of Poland upon Russia (by the way, Mr. Balfour and his six quiet-eyed auditors and the rest of us, a violent invasion of Western Europe by the Soviets).

"There were those in Germany," he said, "who beckoned to them, the flesh creep, "who beckoned them on." The French had saved us from that. The French army, with its gallant Senegalese, was the peacemaker and guardian of all Europe.

One listened incredulous. One waited still incredulous to hear over again from the interpreter. Yes, we were confirmed, he really had said that. Poor exhausted France, who saved Paris, destring nothing but to be left alone, she thinks, starving, invaded by a score of subsidised adventurers, invaded from Lithuania, from Finland, from Japan, in Murmansk, in the Crimea, in the Ukraine and on the Niemen, she stands invaded, it is this Russia which has put France upon the of fensive—for one is reminded of the navvy who kicked his wife to death to protect himself from her violence.

It is interesting to recall here that very far left Labor Party, the architect for German armament, when it was Germany and not France which appeared to dominate Europe, was his stock argument for disarmament.

When he talked to the journalists in preparation for this flimsy M. Briand excused France for wanting submarines in quantity, because he said she was unable to attack Japan in three coasts. But naturer reasons underlie that aspect of the French case from M. Briand's oration. It was too thick even for an American audience. Before even Mr. Balfour, with all his charming tendernes for a fellow statesman, could not well have avoided the plain question: "From whom does France anticipate a sea attack?"

She Builds to Attack British Commerce.

France is in about as much danger of an attack upon her three coasts as the United States is in danger of an attack upon her Canadian frontier. Her ships are as safe upon the sea as a wayfarer on Fifth avenue. If she builds submarines now, she builds them to attack British commerce and for no other reason whatever.

All the Ludendorffs and Soviets in the world do not justify a single submarine. Every submarine she launches is almed as direct a breach of the peace with Britain as though she were to start target practice at Dover harbor across the straits, and every one in England will understand the aim of her action as clearly.

M. Briand, in his discourse to the journalists, argued that the empire of France was as far flung as that of Britain, that her need to protect her communications was as great. This was in the face of Mr. Balfour's reminder that Britain can feed its people only for seven weeks if its overseas supplies are cut off. France can feed from her own soil all the year around. The argument was not good enough for a Dover bathing society, and M. Briand, who is prepared to scrap nothing else, was at least well advised to scrap that.

I will confess that I am altogether perplexed by the behaviour of France at the present time. I do not understand her position in this conference. Why could she not have co-operated in this conference instead of making it a scene of special pleading?

I have already said that the French here seem to be more foreign than any other people and least in touch with the general feeling of the assembly. They seem to have come here as national advocates and special pleaders, without any of that preparation for a new order of hostilities every minister in the small force of troops allowed to Germany is an officer or non-commissioned officer, so that, practically the German army can expand at any moment to millions, and Germany is not morally disarmed because Ludendorff—M. Briand quoted him at some length—is still writing and talking militant nonsense.

Admits Government of Germany Is Honest.

Even M. Briand has to admit that the present German government is honest and well meaning, but it is a weak government. It is not its real thing. The real Germany is the Germany necessary to Lloyd George's argument, and behind Germany is Russia.

He conjured up a great phantom of Soviet Russia, which would have conquered all Europe but for the French army and Poland, the iniquitous attack of Poland upon Russia (by the way, Mr. Balfour and his six quiet-eyed auditors and the rest of us, a violent invasion of Western Europe by the Soviets).

"There were those in Germany," he said, "who beckoned to them, the flesh creep, "who beckoned them on." The French had saved us from that. The French army, with its gallant Senegalese, was the peacemaker and guardian of all Europe.

One listened incredulous. One waited still incredulous to hear over again from the interpreter. Yes, we were confirmed, he really had said that. Poor exhausted France, who saved Paris, desiring nothing but to be left alone, she thinks, starving, invaded by a score of subsidised adventurers, invaded from Lithuania, from Finland, from Japan, in Murmansk, in the Crimea, in the Ukraine and on the Niemen, she stands invaded, it is this Russia which has put France upon the of fensive—for one is reminded of the navvy who kicked his wife to death to protect himself from her violence.

It is interesting to recall here that very far left Labor Party, the architect for German armament, when it was Germany and not France which appeared to dominate Europe, was his stock argument for disarmament.

When he talked to the journalists in preparation for this flimsy M. Briand excused France for wanting submarines in quantity, because he said she was unable to attack Japan in three coasts. But naturer reasons underlie that aspect of the French case from M. Briand's oration. It was too thick even for an American audience. Before even Mr. Balfour, with all his charming tendernes for a fellow statesman, could not well have avoided the plain question: "From whom does France anticipate a sea attack?"

She Builds to Attack British Commerce.

France is in about as much danger of an attack upon her three coasts as the United States is in danger of an attack upon her Canadian frontier. Her ships are as safe upon the sea as a wayfarer on Fifth avenue. If she builds submarines now, she builds them to attack British commerce and for no other reason whatever.

All the Ludendorffs and Soviets in the world do not justify a single submarine. Every submarine she launches is almed as direct a breach of the peace with Britain as though she were to start target practice at Dover harbor across the straits, and every one in England will understand the aim of her action as clearly.

M. Briand, in his discourse to the journalists, argued that the empire of France was as far flung as that of Britain, that her need to protect her communications was as great. This was in the face of Mr. Balfour's reminder that Britain can feed its people only for seven weeks if its overseas supplies are cut off. France can feed from her own soil all the year around. The argument was not good enough for a Dover bathing society, and M. Briand, who is prepared to scrap nothing else, was at least well advised to scrap that.

I will confess that I am altogether perplexed by the behaviour of France at the present time. I do not understand her position in this conference. Why could she not have co-operated in this conference instead of making it a scene of special pleading?

I have already said that the French here seem to be more foreign than any other people and least in touch with the general feeling of the assembly. They seem to have come here as national advocates and special pleaders, without any of that preparation for a new order of foundations of a world settlement that certainly animated nearly every other delegation. They do not seem to understand how people here regard either the conference or France.

May Have Idea They Are Favorites Here.

There is indeed a great and enduring enthusiasm for France in America. General Foch has gone about in America as the greatest of heroes and the most popular of figures. He has been overwhelmed by hospitality and smothered by every honor America could heap upon him. The French flag is far more in evidence than the British both in New York and Washington. This may easily give French visitors the idea that they are exceptional favorites here and that France can count upon American backing in any quarrels she chooses to pick with the British, or the Germans, or Russians.

There could be no greater error. The enthusiasm for Foch is largely personal; he was the general of all the allies; the enthusiasm for France is largely traditional and it has always been the French nationalist of the present day. America loves, as all liberal and intelligent men throughout the world must love, France, the great liberator of men's minds. France of the great Revolution, the France of art and light, France the beautiful and the gallant. It is hard to write bitterly of a country that can give the world an Anatole France, sane and smiling, or so brave and balanced a gentleman as the late Robert Dr'Humieres.

But where is that France today? None of that France has come to the Washington conference, but only an impotent apologist for three years of sins against the peace of the world, an apologist for national aggression, disturbing fear and reckless greed disguised as discretion.

Finds Change of Opinion in France.

Here in Washington I find just the same steady change of opinion about France that is going on in London. I want to write it down as plainly as I can. I want to get it over to my friends in France, because I have loved France greatly, and I do not think the French people realize what is going on among the English-speaking peoples. People here want to see Europe recuperating, and they are beginning to realize that the chief obstacle to a recuperating Europe is the obstinate French resolve to dominate the continent, to revive and carry out the antiquated and impossible policy of Louis XIV., maintained in ancient and intolerable quarrel, setting Pole against Germain and brewing unbodied everywhere in order to divide and rule, instead of entering frankly into a European brotherhood. Feeling about Germany and Austria is changing here, even more rapidly than in England, to pity and indignation. Feeling about Russia drifts the same way.

One detects these undercurrents in the minds of the most unlikely people. People are recalling the France of Napoleon III., that restless and mischievous France, which came so near to a conflict with America in Mexico and which kept Europe in a fever for a quarter of a century. It is an enormous loss to the Washington conference, it is a misfortune to all the world that the great qualities of the French people, their clear-headed, their powerful and yet practical imagination, seem at present to be entirely subordinated to the merely rhetorical and emotional side of the French character.

GERARD WANTS NATIONS TO SHOW CARDS

Declares Parley Would Make More Progress if All Followed Hughes' Example

By JAMES W. GERARD.

Written Especially for International News Service.

(Copyright, 1921, International News Service.)

Washington, Nov. 22.—After the Normans won the battle of Hastings in 1066 and thereby England, they invaded Wales and chased the native Celts into the mountains.

Nearly nine centuries afterwards, Lloyd George, the Welshman, descending from the same fastnesses of the Welsh mountains and armed with new impending taxes and super taxes chased the descendants of the Norman barons from the castles of which they could no longer pay the upkeep.

It will be a pity, indeed, if the most famous of present day politicians, this sole surviving survivor of the Versailles treaty, does not come to Washington for the conference.

There is a tendency to regard him as a clever, most acrobatic politician. But the man who, in the face of all England, dared to stand up for the Boers or Burke in another generation did for America, is no time-serving politician.

MAY COME AS HERO.

If he comes to America, after having first satisfactorily settled the Irish question he will receive a welcome such as no foreigner has ever had and it may be he will arrive at Washington at the exact time when his powers of compromise will settle what are to be the final agreements.

Meanwhile the conference is marking time. Possibly behind closed doors, some progress is being made toward a settlement of the problems of the East — but greater progress would be made if Secretary Hughes' method were followed and a proposed solution boldly thrown by each nation into the arena of controversy.

Premier Briand made a passionate plea on behalf of France but when he quotes Ludendorff and Moltke it quotes men in whom the mass of Germans no longer believe. Moltke beat Napoleon III. Only three days ago I saw the original of a letter written by Napoleon III. to James Watson Webb, in whose house Napoleon had found hospitality while an exile in America. Napoleon expressed the sending of French troops on an imperialistic excursion to Mexico, because the United States was having been defeated, "The military honor of France was involved" and he therefore had to disregard admonishments. The same languarge as that of the Moltke of 1870, of the Ludendorff of today.

In spite of the eloquence of Briand, I do not see why America should take part in the hatred-cle of Europe and agree as all others to protect France. Then we "would be in for it," indeed.

It is fortunate for France that Briand was not defeated in the voting which took place in the French Chamber of Deputies just before his departure. He represents the broad and reasonable viewpoint in France. His opponents are those who would stir up old antagonisms and future wars.

The fateful dusserand, Ambassador of France, can inform him of the mind of America.

TODAY

He feels that his country saved the world, including the United States, and that the world is ungrateful. There is considerable question about the United States. None at all about England, France, with Belgium talking the first shock, kept Germany from crossing the channel.

Other countries do not feel as France does. Italy especially resents France's assumption of the right to be the ruling power of all Europe. Italy has cut her army to 200,000 men and plans to cut down to 175,000.

She knows that France has recommended heavier fortifications along the Italian line. She knows that she, Italy, is menaced on the East, Northeast and Southeast, not merely on the East, as France is. A bigger Italian army will be one result of this conference. Answer, she was not raised to take people seriously.

Italy knows that she was an absolutely necessary factor in the war's winning. She released men and guns from the Southeast French frontier, thus making possible the result at the Marne. And Italy, from the time she started, took charge of Austria and Hungary, taking them off the back of France. Allotted only ten per cent, she is wise enough not to count on the money in her budget.

Italy is entitled to greater recognition. And if she does not get it there will be another European land armament problem.

The muse of history would say: "I'm sick of war. It's always the same. Tell me something about people."

Well, Mrs. Harding was there, in a box at Mr. Hughes' right.

She stayed, listening attentively until three minute of one—she never keeps the President waiting for luncheon. She wore a very plain black dress—made just as it should be. You know that is, that is, she wore a black cloak with a broad collar of gray squirrel fur.

Her hat, a little round black one, was extremely becoming, with a black lace veil over the face. Very pretty veil.

Around her neck was a black velvet band an inch and a half wide, a small diamond ornament fastened to the front of it. Another small diamond ornament on her slightly low necked dress.

Mrs. Harding has what a President would call de la tenue. Her skirt straight as an arrow, listens intently to the statesmen—she owns one herself—and says not a word to the women with her.

At luncheon she was able to tell the Warren Hardings "as she calls your President, everything that happened, down to the expression on W. J. Bryan's face when he heard translated Briand's statement that the dove of peace would have to stay in the coop a while longer.

Mrs. Harding looked very happy, and this is why: She reads thousands of letters from all over the world. One came from a French mother, saying that five of that mother's sons had been killed in the war.

The only son remaining was in America and in trouble. Mrs. Harding found the boy—in jail. A youth weak in mind. Her husband had no authority in the matter.

Mrs. Harding went to those that had authority. She was assisted by Mayor Hylan of New York. She supplied private funds, not government money that might legitimately have been used to deport the youth—deportation would have put a stigma on him at home. That boy will be with his mother in a day or two.

Would you like one more dress?

In the diplomatic gallery, three rows back, sat the Princess Bibesco. You are interested because she is the daughter of Asquith and of Mrs. Asquith, who wrote the book. The Princess Bibesco has just written a book herself, and American women say she does not take them seriously. Answer, she was not raised to take people seriously.

This young lady is covered from feet to chin in a modest little brown cost that makes her look like an imitation Jenny Wren. Under that is a little blue and white dress that could have been worn at the Petit Trianon when the queen made butter. It is a paler blue than robin's egg, and broad white bands cross the chest, running over the arms and left.

There are big white and blue cuffs. Hat comes down to the eyebrow—women will persist in covering their foreheads; a law should forbid it. It's a small, black, round hat with wide ribbons, suggesting the headgear of Lorraine peasant girls, only not so big.

The Prince Bibesco, Rumanian ambassador, was there, too, good-looking young cosmopolite, looking as pleased as a cat that has swallowed a canary. He knows that he has married a genius.

The genius looks Italian, rather than English, and knows—what English girls do not—how to dress as if she had done the whole thing accidentally, without putting her mind on it.

The lady on her right wore, hanging from her hat, a heavy black feather that reached down to her elbow. And that is all in the way of concession to female readers.

HOW TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

A Cincinnati Barber Tells How to Make a Remedy for Gray Hair

A well known resident of Cincinnati, Ohio, who has been a barber for more than forty years, recently made the following statement:

"Anyone can prepare a simple mixture at home, at very little cost, that will darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ ounce glycerine. These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. It is easy to use, does not color the most delicate scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off."—Advertisement.

Dandruff Surely Destroys The Hair

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the fingertips.

By morning, most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.—Advertisement.

Why My Friends All Take Mastin's Yeast Vitamon Tablets Now

To Make Firm Flesh, Increase Energy and Beautify the Complexion

"Just as my friends all started to tell them the wonderful health and beauty-giving properties of the vitamines in yeast and other raw foods, I heard about the big discovery in the form of true yeast-vitamines called Mastin's VITAMON tablets. I started taking two of these tiny tablets with every meal I noticed results almost immediately. Others did too, for people began remarking about how well I looked—how much younger and prettier—and to say I felt better doesn't half express the truly amazing improvement. I have gained several pounds, my flesh is firm, my nerves are calm and there seems to be no end to my new found energy. Now my friends who so carefully watched the change in me are all turning to the concentrated yeast Mastin's VITAMON tablets and not only find them easy and economical to take, but results are so surprisingly quick."

The enthusiasm of this writer is like that of thousands, for Mastin's VITAMON contains not only highly concentrated yeast-vitamines, but the two other still more important vitamines that science has recently found and which makes a proper dose to build firm flesh, create nerves, rich blood and a keen, active brain. It will not cause gas or upset the stomach, but, on the contrary, is a great aid to digestion and to relieve stomach constipation. Boils and skin eruptions seem to vanish like magic under the healthful purifying influence, leaving the skin fresh clear and beautiful. So remarkable are the benefits from these highly concentrated Mastin's VITAMON tablets that entire satisfaction is absolutely guaranteed or the small amount you pay for the trial will be promptly refunded. Be sure to remember the name Mastin's VI-TA-MON—the original and genuine yeast-vitamine tablet—there is nothing else like it, so do not accept imitations or substitutes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL PLEADS TO UPHOLD THE LAW

MAYFLOWER DESCENDANTS

As sketched by Harmony at the 24th annual dinner commemorating the signing of the compact at Provincetown 301 years ago.

Attorney-General Allen declared any American who speaks publicly against the eighteenth amendment "is unworthy of his blood in that he denounces our laws and institutions," at the twenty-sixth annual dinner of the Massachusetts Society of Mayflower Descendants, held at the Hotel Somerset in commemoration of the 301st anniversary of the signing of the compact in the cabin of the Mayflower at Provincetown.

"As long as the eighteenth amendment is the law of the land, it is his duty to uphold it. If he fails in this duty what can one expect of the foreigner who comes to our shores?" continued Allen.

"We have a proud inheritance in this country," he said, "but it behooves us to remember that it is an inheritance of persecution, and unless we ourselves are careful to extend the hand of welcome to those who come to our shores we are not worthy of our inheritance.

"If democracy is to survive here it must extend the hand of welcome to all.

"Obedience to the law is more vital today than ever before. We are in the period of reconstruction that follows the war, and the question of whether or not the men who died have died in vain depends upon whether we carry on the torch which they threw down.

"Unless we realize to the full that our inheritance of persecution makes us kin to all the world, we are unworthy of that inheritance, for the lowest and meanest wretch who walks is your brother and my brother."

Thomas C. Thatcher, chairman of the Provincetown Tercentenary Commission, declared that "the Puritans stood for liberty, but not for license, and they stood for law and order."

ANNA E. MORSE IS BRIDE OF SCIENTIST

Daughter of Shipbuilder Was Once Engaged to Dorchester Young Man

Miss Anna E. Morse, daughter of Charles W. Morse, Boston ship builder and financier, and Dr. John Casson Geiger, of San Francisco, today are on their way to the Pacific Coast on their honeymoon, having been married at St. Thomas' Church, New York, by the rector of the church, Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires.

The wedding, an exceedingly simple ceremony, and at which there were but few invited guests, was followed by a wedding breakfast at the Hotel Buckingham. Miss Hattie Bunker was the bride's only attendant, and her brother, D. W. Morse, was best man.

The bridegroom is connected with a scientific commission at the University of California and Leland Stanford, and is associated with the Rockefeller Research Division of the United States Health Service.

The marriage of Miss Morse recalls the unhappy ending of her engagement to the late Frederick R. G. Dean, Jr., twenty-one years old, of No. 70 Tonawanda street, Dorchester, who died in February of last year. Miss Morse was with him to the end.

Dean was taken sick while at Schenectady, N. Y. Pneumonia and his death followed rapidly. His father was a Boston druggist, and he and visits eagerly.

FORD TO ADD TO MAN POWER, SAYS EDISON

To Employ Million and Give Farmers Chance to Work 12 Months in Year

(Copyright, 1921, by International News Service.)

Orange, N. J., Nov. 22.—Thomas A. Edison is sure that Henry Ford will do a big thing for the development of the country in the development of the Muscle Shoals water power project.

Muscle Shoals will produce a million horse power and employ a million men, but Mr. Edison believes the object lesson to the nation may be the biggest thing about it.

"The development of Muscle Shoals," said Mr. Edison in his laboratory today, "should cause others to develop water power in other parts of the country. There is enormous power going to waste not only in the South, but all over the country. West Virginia is full of water power. Water power at work is real wealth. Wheat is not wealth. We may raise two billion dollars worth this year, and a year hence it will have been destroyed. But a water power goes on forever.

"There are no more Niagaras in the country, but there are a great many smaller powers that, in the aggregate, are of great national importance.

"I have been talking for thirty or forty years about the desirability of developing these smaller powers, and establishing local industries upon them in which farmers might work eight months in the year. Henry Ford is the first man in the country who has had sufficient imagination to see the opportunity and take advantage of it. I understand that he has established factories in which parts of his automobiles are made.

"Think of the enormous increase of the manpower of the country that would result from the giving to farmers of an opportunity to work twelve months a year instead of four.

"What Ford sets out to do he'll do. He permits nothing to stop him. Three or four years ago he gave orders to change the mudguard on his machine. A few days elapsed and he asked if the guard had been changed and was told that nothing had been done because the factory was so crowded with orders.

"Over a period of six weeks he inquired about the mudguard several times, only to be told on each occasion that nothing had been done because of the great rush of business. Ford did not say anything the last time, but he hunted up a twelve-pound sledge hammer and went into the plant.

"He went up to the big bending machines that cost perhaps $20,000 each. He raised the sledge with which the mudguards were bent, and smashed them so they could no longer be used. Then he said to the man in charge of the plant, 'Now I guess you will change the mudguard.' The smashing of the machines compelled them to cease production—think of that! Ford is the only man in the United States who would have done that.'

Henry E. Richards, a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has been appointed as instructor in electrical engineering at the School of Engineering, Northeastern College, to take up the work of Professor P. GO, AND SIN NO MORE!

'BOHEMIAN GIRL' DELIGHTS AT ARLINGTON

Balfe Opera Well Sung by the Boston Society of Singers

The Boston Society of Singers who, during the Winter months, are to continue their remarkable English performances at the Arlington Theatre, are presenting "The Bohemian Girl" this week.

The company, starting on their seventh week of English opera, opened last evening with a revival of Balfe's tuneful light opera. This is not only attractive to the opera going lovers, but also to others as it contains many popular numbers which there is no doubt we all know and love.

Thaddeus is well sung by Norman Arnold and Helena Morrill carries her part of Arline very well. Mr. Waterous and Mr. Orchard will sing on alternate nights as Devilhoof. Then the Queen of the Gypsies is divided between Miss Boyden and Miss De Motte, both taking turns during the week.

The opera is conducted by Frank Waller.

FRANKLIN PARK—Today and tomorrow will be seen William DeMille's new film, "After the Show," and the regular bill of vaudeville. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Selznick presents Conway Tearle in "After Midnight, a chapter of "The Hope Diamond Mystery" and vaudeville.

BOSTON THEATRE—Dustin Farnum in "The Devil Within," is the feature this week. The vaudeville is headed by Janet of France who, with Charles Hamp, offers a musical playlet, "A Little Touch of Paris." Blue Bert Kenney and I. R. Nobody present a novelty.

Shows to Remain

SELWYN THEATRE—Only seven more performances remain of Florence Reed in Edgar Selwyn's drama, "The Mirage." A special matinee will be given on Thursday, Thanksgiving Day, and the regular Wednesday matinee will be omitted.

TREMONT THEATRE — John Charles Thomas in the Charles Dillingham musical comedy, "The Love Letter," began his third week last evening. The baritone of Mr. Thomas is heard to the best advantage. The usual Wednesday matinee this week will be omitted for the Thanksgiving afternoon performance.

COLONIAL THEATRE—A. L. Erlanger's musical production, "Two Little Girls in Blue," began its final fortnight last evening. The regular Wednesday matinee will be omitted, and a holiday performance will be given Thursday afternoon.

GLOBE THEATRE — In consequence of the continued popularity of Doug Fairbanks in his film version of Alexander Dumas' "The Three Musketeers," the manager announces that a special performance will be given on Thursday, Thanksgiving Day, at 1 p. m. This performance will be given in addition to the two regular performances given each day at 2:30 and 8:15.

TREMONT TEMPLE—In spite of of the interest shown in William Fox's film, "Over the Hill," the film will end its engagement on Saturday evening, November 26. The picture was made from the famous poem by Will Carleton.

WILBUR THEATRE—"The Rose Girl" began the last week of its Boston engagement at the Wilbur Theatre last night. Fred Hillebrand plays the leading comedy role in this musical comedy attraction.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE—"The Bad Man," the satirical melodrama from the pen of Porter Emerson Browne, acted colorfully by Holbrook Blinn, began another week of its run at the Plymouth Theatre last night.

What Happens

when you shampoo our way

The first result is softness you have never before experienced after washing. The usual dryness and brittleness are absent.

Your hair is glossy and silky in texture—every strand gleams. Most important, your scalp is purged from every trace of dandruff.

Only palm and olive oils can accomplish such results. They have been famous since Cleopatra's day for their softening, beautifying qualities both on hair and skin.

These costly oils, imported from overseas, are the basis of Palmolive. Their combination produces the softening, beautifying shampoo.

Olive oil for gloss
Palm oil for richness

Olive oil possesses softening qualities which neutralize the drying effects of washing. Palm oil contributes body richness and lasting qualities.

In combination they produce a thick, mild, profuse, penetrating lather which softens the scalp and reaches every root and hair cell.

This lather loosens the dandruff scales, dislodges and dissolves them, leaving the scalp and hair free to function healthfully.

Keeps your hair healthy

This thorough removal of dandruff, which doctors call seborrhea, is most necessary, as even the accumulation on healthy scales injures the hair.

The blend of palm and olive oils you get in Palmolive softens and penetrates the scales, loosening the cap-like accumulation.

Gentle massage forces it into the tissue of the scalp, leaving it healthfully purged and clean. Hair shampooed with Palmolive is never dry, harsh and brittle. The blending of these soothing oils leaves it soft, glossy and silky.

SONG TEAM AT MAJESTIC WIN APPROVAL

Military Elephants and Other Big Acts Round Out Strong Bill

Patrons of the sparkling Shubert vaudeville at the Majestic Theatre last evening enjoyed a rare treat in the headline act presented so pleasingly by Hal Fordo and Lieutenant Gitz Rice.

Fordo, the former star in "Honeydew," has a baritone that is remarkably fine and which was duly appreciated by the audience. Gitz Rice's fame through his songs had preceded him, and the team received a hearty Boston welcome.

Robinson's Military Elephants made a "hearty" hit with an intelligence reminiscent of the Molly, Waddy and Tuny trio at Franklin Park, now dwindled to a duet.

Lee White and Clay Smith rendered catchy songs.

Griff, "the bubble king," his Bohemevik doll and ventriloquist's work, won instant and sustained approval.

The Gaudsmiths, with their poodles, proved favorites and evoked considerable laughter.

The Shubert News Weekly and Mutt and Jeff comedy were, as ever, highly popular features of the entertainment.

HOWDOEN SQUARE THEATRE—Mildred Harris (in person) is here this week and Monday afternoon and night she was given a big reception by the audience. Tuesday night and Wednesday matinee Miss Harris will hold a reception for the women patrons on the stage, and Wednesday night souvenir photographs of herself will be given to all patrons. "The Son of Wallingford," Will Rogers in "A Poor Relation" and other features are on the bill.

GORDON'S CENTRAL SQUARE—The engagements of D. W. Griffith's spectacle "Way Down East" opened yesterday for a run of six days only. There are many other attractions including a splendid program of all-star vaudeville acts.

GORDON'S SEVANO—George Fitzmaurice's production of "Experience" scored on its first presentation in Dorchester yesterday. Charles Chaplin was seen in "The Idle Class."

WALDRON'S CASINO—Waldron's echoed with laughter yesterday when Barney Gerard's latest burlesque success, the "Girls de Looks," was presented for a week's engagement.

'THEODORA' AT SHUBERT FULL OF THRILLS

Gigantic and Colossal Film of Roman History Dazzling as a Spectacle

The Big Minutes in the film play "Theodora," revealed to Boston by Goldwyn last night at the Shubert, are over and here for a limited engagement, come when the beautiful young Empress, Theodora, is tried for her lover, Andreas, orders the lions turned loose against a mob of angry citizens.

The lions are turned loose and the picture shows the Circus Maximus as if the wild animals had come up to the Stadium hungry last Saturday afternoon for the Harvard-Yale game, the Greatest Show on Earth at Bridgeport, Conn., or a mad rush of the populace and none do not escape.

When the rush began last night, in this moving picture, more than one man in the audience was seen to look about for the nearest exit. There is no telling else like it to be seen in the cinemas. Only an aged theatregoer can recall some moment as big in the moviedramas of old.

They tell us the film spectacle "Theodora" was two years in the making, employed thousands of supernumeraries and cost 15,000,000 lire. Now will dispute the statements after seeing the result. Whether the Italian directors got the largest and the possible effect out of the thousands who came and went, and marched up and down, as citizens, soldiers, slaves and what-not, is an open question. But they are all there.

BASED ON HISTORY.

The story is based upon history. Theodora, daughter of a lion tamer and foster daughter of Tamyris (also a lion tamer), became notorious in the sixth century in ancient Byzantium, the modern Constantinople. When she was twenty-two, in the year 523, she became the wife of Justinian, who some months later was elevated to the throne of the Roman empire and crowned his Theodora Empress of the East.

Her longing for adventure led the young empress to wanderings incognito about the city streets. On such an adventure—as Sardou told us the Bernhardt, and as the photo playwright tells us with Sardou as his authority—she meets Andreas, a young Greek patrician who, visiting Byzantium, conspires with certain malcontents to overthrow the emperor. Not knowing Theodora to be the empress, Andreas fails in love with her, and she with him. The unhappy results of this love affair constitute the historic story which now is presented in film form.

We have here, indeed, a screening at once "gigantic and colossal." There probably never was a film before in which so many different persons took part. The program names not only Hilda Jolivet, the screen appearance of the empress leaves nothing to be desired, but Ferruccio Biancini, as the Emperor Justinian; Rene Maupre, as the young Greek lover; Adolph Touchi, as the General Hilarius, and Guido Marcjano, as the chief executioner. No program, perhaps not even the city city directory, could name everybody who has something to do in "Theodora."

The play is important as an illustration of the heights the cinema has reached in Italy. In America, when we think of the making of a photodrama, our thoughts are almost exclusively of California and Long Island. Here is spectacular and convincing proof that the U. S. A. has no monopoly of biz things in the films.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT.

One experienced last night a thrill like that of foreign travel in reading that the settings and palaces in these wonderful pictures were "erected by A. del Agnolla of Rome and Mazzoncelli of Milan," that the arms and accessories came from Eredi Gentili, that twenty-five thousand costumes were supplied by Bernardini, and that the setting's were designed by the famous Vatican architect, Signor A. Armando Brasini.

You will find food for thought in every scene of "Theodora." It may come as something like a shock to learn that the one thing that caused the Emperor Justinian the most annoyance, fourteen hundred or fifteen hundred years ago—next, perhaps, to the strange behavior of the queenly daughter of a lion-tamer—was a big jump in the tax rate. We also learn from "Theodora" that there was nothing particularly new about the Stillman case.

"Theodora" is History, a Love Story, and the Roaring Lions, all at once. By all means see it.

ORPHEUM THEATRE—A holiday bill was presented yesterday. This same bill will be repeated today and tomorrow. The variety was topped by "Let's Go," a comedy playlet by Batchelor, Vert and Reamer. The remaining acts included Turner and Turner, Gordon Dio, Harvey De Vera Trio, Fred Mahoney and Jewell's Manikins. Shirley Mason was seen in "Queenie." A new bill will be given on Thursday, Thanksgiving Day. One of the features for next week will be "The Sheik," with Rodolph Valentino and Agnes Ayres in the principal roles.

IRENE BORDONI CHARMS AUDIENCE AT KEITH'S

Irene Bordoni, star of the late "As You Were" company, came for a week's engagement at Keith's. Miss Bordoni sang a cycle of American, French and spanish songs with the charm that has made her a favorite on the musical comedy stage. Her gowns are said to be the latest Parisian importations.

Gallagher and Shean, two Irish comedians, have a comic skit which should run the act of Miss Bordoni a close second for popularity with Keith audiences this week. Leon Bankoff appeared in an original conception labelled "The dancing dazzler." Miss Venita Gould, mimic, gave her impressions of popular stage stars.

Others on the bill were: Paul Decker and company in a comedy, "I Heard—!" Mme. Branda in "The Circus Beautiful," a riding act; Maude Powers and Vernon Wallace in "Georgia on Broadway"; the Miller sisters and Daly, Mack and Daly.

FINAL

All back pictures in the $5,000 Movie Contest will be given away PRIZE with the Boston Daily Advertiser on Thanksgiving Day.

Motion Picture News and Gossip

By FRIEDA DAVIS.

THE CHIEF scene of Universal's "Conflict," starring Priscilla Dean at the Park Theatre this week, is a summer version of D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" ice scene. Here we see Priscilla Dean racing madly beside a rushing river to save the hero, who is being carried down stream in a log drive.

One of the differences between this scene and the famous Griffith one, is that the audience is constantly aware that it is all happening in a quiet backwater spot, where no danger can possibly befall anyone concerned. Even when the heroine slips off a log, she finds herself only waist deep in the river. In spite of all that, it is exciting.

"Conflict" deals with the logging situation in the Northwest. John Hamlin, the austere, hard man, who owns the entire place—he is the exception of the bit of land owned by the hero, Jerome—refuses to run his peice the same way. When she finds circumstances too much for her, in fact, when she believes that the old housekeeper has tried to poison her, she decides to put up with it any longer. According to the camp of the Ginger brothers, and there large plots to be developed along with his logging. Eventually they succeed, but not without more than a little conflict. And they live well named.

Miss Dean does splendid work in this picture, though she is not given as much opportunity for emotional, fiery scenes as usual. She is not the sort who can be lightly passed over in any part and regarded as what opportunities she may or may not have. She is one of our most forceful players.

Edward Connelly deserves credit for his playing of the aristocrat uncle, John Remable. Though he usually figures in small roles in many of the films that "come out of the West," Connelly can be depended upon to do something worth while. His work stands out as high lights.

Martha Mattox is equally good as the old housekeeper, though it is true that she reverts to the good old melodramatic, mysterious type that, as Dorcas Romaine says, "either has done something awful or is going to do it." Mr. Shumway is good as the "heavy" who reforms, while Herbert Rawlinson is seen as the hero. In part, comparatively speaking, but a good one, nevertheless.

GORDON'S SCOLLAY SQUARE—George Loane Tuckers last picture production, "Lorna Doone," is now presented with no success last night. Other attractions include Clyde Cook comedy, "The Forester," and an excellent program of vaudeville, headed by the act beautiful, "Juvenility."

GORDON'S OLD SOUTH—"One Arabian Night" began an engagement at Gordon's Old South Theatre yesterday. It is a First National attraction, directed by Ernst Lubitsh and starring Pola Negri, the incomparable.

GORDON'S OLYMPIA — Marie Nordstrom in "Let's Pretend" was the headliner of the vaudeville program yesterday. The film, "The Child Thou Gavest Me," was shown yesterday.

GAYETY THEATRE—Music and comedy, cleverly combined with many novel and sensational specialties made up the burlesque production entitled "Peek-A-Boo" which began an engagement of a week yesterday.

OTIS SKINNER WINS TRIUMPH IN NEW PLAY

Essays Role of Bull Fighter in "Blood and Sand" at Hollis Street Theatre

It could hardly be supposed that Blasco Ibanez's novel, "Blood and Sand," could be transferred to the stage without changes. The surprising thing about the play as it was presented at the Hollis Street Theatre, last night, is that Tom Cushing, the adapter, was able to keep so closely to the printed pages, and yet get logic and continuity.

True, in the novel, Rosario, Juan Gallardo's wife, did not appear during the corrida, but in the play she was forced, in view of later events, to appear before the greeting with Doña Sol. Nevertheless, the adapter has kept to facts and woven an unusually colorful and dramatic piece.

TEMPERAMENT HOLDS SWAY.

We see El Gallardo in all his finery, being prepared for the arena. He receives the homage of the people like a prima donna, letting temperament hold sway.

We see Doña Sol come to wish him success before he enters the ring, and we see the start of that love affair. Later we have El Gallardo swaggering into the circle of men surrounding Doña Sol, hear him greet them noisily, grandiloquently, without intention.

The most exciting scenes of the book, those of the bull-fights, have, necessarily, been cut. The story lacks no color, even without that apart that forms much of the background of the story and Daniel Bell is The author's character. Juan Gallardo, lives; his story, his life, his love for Doña Sol are all there and his downfall, brought about by her fickleness, is clearly given.

ROLLICKING BULL-FIGHT.

Otis Skinner makes the bull-fighter a rollicking, swaggering, mellow person. Though not as lithesome perhaps, as we might have pictured him, he does, however, give him the fullness, the enthusiasm, the childish petulance when he is thwarted in anything, that a public person of Juan's stamp would have.

Catherine Calvert, who has been devoting her activites to the screen for some time past, appears as Doña Sol. She gives us an impressive good performance, starting out well and steadily growing better. There is a tendency to pose, doubtless brought with her from studios, but she doesn't, as many do, try to "register" her emotions.

Madeline Delmar does splendidly as Rosario, Juan's wife, particularly in the third act. Cornelia Otis Skinner, daughter of the star, appears in the second act as Rosa Bernarte, one of Doña Sol's guests. She gives her comedy role a cleverness that gives it values. The piece has been well mounted and carries the Spanish atmosphere successfully.

MODERN & BEACON—Rex Ingram, producer of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," has a worthy successor in his production of "The Conquering Power" seen this week. It is the story of Balzac's "Eugenie Grandet," translated to the screen and created by Alice Terry and Rudolph Valentino. Then comes Betty Compson in "For Those We Love."

Other Theatres

PARK THEATRE—One of the most thrilling pictures ever made for the screen was shown yesterday when "Conflict," starring Priscilla Dean, had its premier in this city. The suspense is real, the thrill is actual, and Miss Dean deserves credit for one of the most fearless stunts ever performed for the screen. Viola Dana, as a Federal secret service agent in "There Are No Villains," is the other feature.

HOWARD ATHENAEUM — The Chick Chick Burlesque Co., headed by Harry (Hello Jake) Fields and a cluster of dancing girls delight in good measure. The great Blackstone, master magician, furnished entertainment with his act of mystery and other features of merit were on the program.

SOMERVILLE PLAYERS—Two capacity audiences greeted Somerville players in their revival of Jamie A. Herne's rural comedy, "Shore Acres." The principal roles are capably handled by Enid Markey and Arthur Howard. A Thanksgiving matinee on next Thursday will be given at 3 o'clock.

CROWDS FLOCK TO HARVEST FESTIVAL

Thanksgiving Market Is Feature of Women Voters' League Affairs

Large crowds are swarming the harvest festival and Thanksgiving market, which is on its second day at the Copley-Plaza under the auspices of the Massachusetts League of Women Voters. Those in charge say that never before has the bazaar been such a success.

Featuring the festival is an old French market under the supervision of Mrs. Horace Morison. She spent many days collecting and importing distinctly French commodities for her market, and one may secure everything from "soup to nuts."

Members of the eighty-five branches of the league in this state are cooperating to make the affair a success, and about fifteen branches have tables. Boston and Brookline have the largest representation, with several booths each.

Two automobiles are to be disposed of during the bazaar. Both the crowded with attractively furnished cars and adjoining ball rooms are booths, all carrying out the colors of yellow and white.

The grand finale is a dance to be given Wednesday night under the direction of Mrs. George R. Fearing, jr., and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs.

BASKET FUND IN NEED OF MORE MONEY

employment, there is far more need for assistance this year, than at any time during the past decade.

Letters appealing for food, each telling a different story of destitution, arrive in every mail from weary mothers and their half-starved children.

In every letter the hope is expressed that the family will have a good dinner on Christmas Day.

There is still room in the treasury of the Fund for money. Unless contributions come in faster we will be unable to feed hundreds of families that we are planning to assist.

From a regular contributor of the Fund, who signed himself "F. M. A.," came a check for $25, which he asked to be credited "In memory of Junius T. Auerbach and Stanley Bishop."

Messrs. Auerbach and Bishop, and the man who made the contribution in their memory were "pals." They lived as neighbors in Brookline, and frequently discussed the work of the Boston American Christmas Basket Fund in one another's homes.

The trio not only aided the Fund financially, but also gave much of their time in locating worthy families and in the distribution of food.

Messrs. Auerbach and Bishop were widely known Boston attorneys. Mr. Auerbach was one of the most youthful to graduate from Harvard. Mr. Bishop was a graduate of Phillips-Exeter and Boston University. In closing his communication, the Boston business man wrote:

"Sincerely wishing that the Basket Fund receives the support that is justly due it, I am."

RUSSIAN BARITONE TO SING.

Tickets have been placed on sale by members of the Women's Auxiliary, Back Bay Post, American Legion, for the excellent concert to be given in Jordan Hall, Sunday afternoon, December 18. Another big artist has been added to the list of entertainers. He is Nicola Oulukanoff, Russian baritone, formerly a member of Boston Opera, Paris Opera and Imperial Opera of Petrograd.

Mr. Oulukanoff has been one of the leading exponents of Russian music in the United States, and has done much to bring before the American public Russian music practically unknown here. At the Jordan Hall concert, entire net proceeds of which will go to the American's Christmas Fund, he will sing a group of tuneful Russian folk and gypsy songs.

The other artists who will appear are: Rodolfo Fornari, baritone; Marion Crozie, pianist; Harriette Pedersen-Webb, soprano, and Marjorie Pierce Possell, violinist.

The services of all of these artists have been contributed without cost by Black's New England Theatres, in which they are appearing.

Tickets for the entertainment and dance of the Boston American Girls' Club, in St. Mary's Hall, Cambridge, Monday evening, December 5, will be ready for distribution tomorrow. The girls have engaged McIsaac Brothers' novelty singing orchestra, of Allston, to play for general dancing. All members of the committee report a big demand for tickets.

DANCE IN WALTHAM.

Judging from the advance sale of tickets the entertainment and dancing party, under the auspices of Mrs. Helen M. Whitten School of Dancing, in the Studio at Waltham, will be a big success. The party is to be held on Friday evening, December 2. Mrs. Whitten, who is an unusually clever exponent of terpsichorean art, will give a solo dance during the course of the entertainment. In addition, many of her pupils will appear in solo numbers. All of the children are enthusiastic over the work they are doing in helping feed needy families at Christmas, through the medium of the American's Fund.

Among the children who are assisting in making the entertainment and dancing party a success are the following: Mary Sullivan, Velmour Sullivan, Ruth Vaughn, Katherine Nolan, Jenny Douglas, Mildred Goddard, Paul Lefevre, Dorothy Munster, Marralyn Tainter, Helen Madden, Mildred Hayes, Mildred Hoban, Caroline Brehm, Hope McGurn, Janet Hope, Eleanor Stewart, Lois Tubbs, Alma Fonts, Evelyn Watson, Madeline Royle, Gladys McCormack, Hazel Hatch, Marion Newcomb, Josephine Johnston, Betty Hill, Betty Moore, Margarita Seaver, Viola Holmes, Dorothy and Marjorie Haymun, Marguerite Moschard, Forest Thornberg, Betty Weber, Joan Damon, Gertrude MacDonald, Byrl Gadbois and Katherine Mann.

VALLEY CLUB TO AID.

The Valley Club has voted to contribute 10 per cent. of the net proceeds of its ball in Hibernia Hall, Roxbury, Thanksgiving night, to the American's Christmas Fund. The committee in charge of the dance follows: Thomas Carr, Thomas J. Hayes, Edward L. Englert, John White, Miss Mae Flaherty, Miss Mary McCarty, Miss Lillian Schlosky, Miss Madeline Houseman and Miss Mary E. Miller.

AMERICAN KILLED IN RIOTING AT BOMBAY

London, Nov. 22.—A dispatch today from Bombay stated that William Francis Dougherty, an American engineer, was killed during last week's rioting in that city. The coroner's verdict following an inquest, said the dispatch, was that he died of injuries from sticks thrown by the rioters.

STRIKE CALLED BY TELEPHONE OPERATORS

Brockton Girls Vote to Go Out Tomorrow Unless All Demands Are Met

Brockton, Nov. 22.—The telephone operators of Brockton have voted to go out on strike at 7 o'clock Wednesday morning unless Traffic Chief Linwood Ross will grant their demands unconditionally when they meet with him at noon today.

Over 115 girls are affected by the vote, which is said to have been unanimous. The trouble arose when the president of the telephone operators' union here, Miss Margaret Hickey, was dismissed last Thursday.

The girls claim that her dismissal was unfair and the outcome of personal prejudice held against her by the chief operator, Miss Lena Sherman.

In addition to the dismissal of Miss Hickey, the girls are enraged over the fact that several others of their number have been dropped. They are bitter against Miss Sherman, declaring that she has conducted herself in an arbitrary manner and that she is unjust and unfair as an executive.

Miss Hickey was dismissed, say the girls, for an altogether trivial offence. Miss Sherman, it is claimed, found fault with her for her failure to produce her service report card on demand, although Miss Hickey's defenders insist that this card was supposed to be in the chief operator's custody at the time.

It is believed that the girls will demand today that Miss Sherman be dismissed or removed from her present position to a subordinate one.

XMAS REVOLTS FEARED IN GERMANY

High Prices, Scarcity of Food and Clothing Arouse Intense Discontent

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND.
Boston American Staff Correspondent.

Berlin, Nov. 22.—With Christmas less than five weeks away there are vast holes in stocks of every kind in Germany.

A visit to shops and stores reveals startling empty spaces, in many instances the shelves being swept entirely clean of goods.

These voids in the sack of Germany's Santa Claus are causing grave fears that Germany may, instead of the joys of Yuletide, face revolutionary uprisings at Christmas time.

The press today is full of alarming rumors of the sudden renewal of the activity of the Communists framing new uprisings. Reports of secret agents have been made to the government regarding the program of the Communists for a renewal of the uprisings.

The Reds are declared to be making use of the present unprecedented climb in prices, the scarcity of food and clothes for the poorer classes and the hunger strike of 120 Communist prisoners in one of the prisons near Berlin, to start agitation for political violence. Their intensity in this line is admittedly worrying the government, as well as the other political parties.

The time planned for the revolt is said to be just before Christmas, when the discomfort of the poorer classes will have reached its highest pitch.

MISS NILSSON, SOPRANO, DIES IN DENMARK

One of Brightest Luminories of Operatic World Passes Away at Age of 78

Copenhagen, Nov. 22 (By the Associated Press)—Christine Nilsson, the noted operatic soprano, died here this morning.

Christine Nilsson, known throughout the world as the "second Jenny Lind," made her debut in Paris at the age of twenty-one years. Her first appearance was in the role of Violetta in Verdi's "La Traviata." She met with instant success and soon her name was heralded far and wide as a second Jenny Lind.

Soon after her Paris debut she came to America and carried this country by storm with her marvelous performance of the role of Marghierite in "Faust." Notwithstanding that Patti was then at her height in the operatic world, the Swedish soprano had the musical world at her feet.

The great prima donna was born at Stjonhal, near Wexio, Sweden, on Aug. 3, 1843. Her ability as a singer was early evidenced and at the age of eight years she was looked upon as a marvel. At the age of 12 years she used to sing at country fairs. It was while singing at one of these fairs that a magistrate heard her and, impressed by her voice, made it possible for her to study.

Miss Nilsson married Auguste Rouzard, who died in 1885. Five years later she married the Count de Miranda, who died shortly afterwards.

In the year of 1908 interest was aroused by the statements of Mrs. Christine Nilsson Murray, of Lynn, who declared that she was the daughter of the great singer. Mrs. Murray stated that she had been left by the prima donna at an orphanage in Boston when an infant.

She told the story of how she had been left there by the great singer under the name of Christine Nelson. She stated that she had been adopted and that the prima donna had come to see her in her new home.

All attempts of Mrs. Murray to prove her relationship to the great Swedish singer met with defeat, but she persisted in her assertions. Finally, in 1920, an injunction was secured in London by the diva restraining Mrs. Murray from issuing her statements alleging relationship to the singer.

But Mrs. Murray still insisted that she was the deserted child of the "second Jenny Lind."

URGE OUSTING OF FILM OPERATOR IN SCHOOL

Springfield Union Men Protest Employment of Teacher for Lectures

Springfield, Nov. 22.—Moving picture operators and members of the Allied Theatre Craftsmen of this city are determined to force Howard C. Kelly, head of the science department of the High School of Commerce to stop operating moving picture machines at the school lectures two or three times a week.

They have elected a committee, headed by John F. Gatelee president of the local union, and instructed it to call upon Major Leonard this week and urge him to take steps to prevent the teacher from doing the two jobs.

Gatelee declared today that "the thing is an outrage."

"Mr. Kelly has no right at such a time as this, when so many are out of work, to be operating a moving picture machine," he said. "We did not object in normal times, but in these days of unemployment it is all wrong. There are many men to whom the $10 a night he gets for this job would be a godsend."

According to Gatelee, the science teacher has been employed in this way two or three times a week, at least, and probably oftener.

The committee will see the Mayor later this week, and if they fail to get results from that visit an appeal will be made direct to the school committee. Then, if that proves fruitless, they will turn to the legislative committee of the Central Labor Union, in an effort to exert pressure upon the Board of Aldermen. Six or eight of the members of the union are today without jobs, declared Gatelee.

BAD ROADS CHANGE PLANS FOR WEDDING

Plymouth, Nov. 22.—Balked in their plans for a quiet wedding in Boston, when slippery roads and rain slowed up their trip by auto, Miss Jeanette Frances Eldridge and James Shepard, Jr., both of Hyannis, were married here by Court Clerk John E. Miles. The young couple started from Hyannis by auto, intending to be married in Boston. When darkness overtook them they had reached Plymouth. Miles, after telephoning the young woman's parents, performed the ceremony and the couple proceeded toward Boston.

BETTY ALDEN'S COMMENT ON SOCIETY

Elite Aid Benefit at Colonial for Disabled Men

By BETTY ALDEN.

PRACTICALLY everyone has been offered a chance, in some way or another, to aid the huge benefit performance at the Colonial Theatre this afternoon. The entertainment, under the auspices of the Community Service of Boston, is being given to swell the fund for work among sick and disabled war veterans.

A number of stage luminaries now appearing in Boston will do their bit to make the performance a memorable one; prominent matrons are acting as patronesses, a number of whom have taken boxes for the occasion and will entertain some of the more seriously wounded ex-service men; a group of debs and sub-debs have offered their services as ushers and flower-girls during the performance; even the service of stage hands, electricians and musicians will be gratis. Although the war is over, any affair in aid of "the boys" is bound to be a popular one. Which is a a very fine thing, when one considers all the tightly bound official red-tape which refuses to be unwound.

Miss Jean Cotton, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frederick J. Cotton of Beacon street, is one of the twentyfive young girls acting as ushers and flower-girls. Miss Cotton, whose recent presentation was a notable affair for the younger set, is leaving town tomorrow with her mother for Baltimore, where the Cottons have many relatives. In the Oriole city, Jean is to attend a number of debutante parties, the first of which is a large dance on Thanksgiving night.

Of the patronesses who have given their names are: Mesdames John C. Gray, Leverett Tuckerman, 2d, Alexander Whiteside, Harold J. Coolidge, Russel Codman, Dudley L. Pickman, Francis B. Crowinshield, John E. Thayer, George Lee, Frederick S. Whitwell, Charles C. Weld, S. V. R. Crosby, Robert G. Shaw, 2d, George S. Mumford, Oliver Ames, Jr., Henry Cabot, Amory A. Lawrence, John Silsbee Curtis, George Lewis, James M. Newell, Ezra Fitch, James Cunninghams Gray, Alvan Fuller, Leonhard Williams, David Cheever and Theodore Burgess. Also Mmes. William L. Parker, Edwin Farnum Greene, Henry D. Chapin, Edward J. Holmes, Edgar Achorn and Leon Weyburn; also the Misses Rose Dexter, Cornelius Bowditch, Dorothy Forbes and Mary Bartlett, with Governor and Mrs. Channing Cox and Mayor and Mrs. Andrew Peters.

These are busy days at Washington, with so many delegates from here, there and everywhere flocking to the capital. Busy days for the men, but every bit as busy for the feminine contingent at the capital, whose business it is to see that these visiting officials and high personages are properly entertained.

The granddaughter of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Mrs. Grafton Minot, is taking a prominent part in the various affairs which are being given thick and fast during the arms conference. Mrs. Minot (Constance Gardner) comes to the North Shore every Summer to her villa, "The Alhambra," on Mingo Beach, Pride's Crossing, and her host of friends and relatives in Boston are following with interested eyes her activities at the capital.

Mrs. Minot was among the guests at the dinner given last week by the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Denby in honor of the Earl and Countess Beatty. The former Constance Gardner wore an exceedingly quaint and becoming gown of rather stiff black taffeta made after the very latest fashion, hooped at the hip line and entirely encircled with a festoon of pastel color flowers and fruits in natural shades, the flowers made of ribbon in the new fashioned way.

Apropos of activities in Washington—of course the first great social event of the armament conference was the dinner and reception given at the White House on Saturday. The guests at the dinner were the delegates to the conference and their wives, with members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and Mrs. Taft, the Speaker of the House and Mrs. Gillett, General Pershing, the Under-Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry D. Fletcher, Mrs. Marshall Field, and the President's military and naval aides, Colonel Clarence G. Sherrill and Commander R. S. Holmes.

An interesting feature of this affair was the appearance of Mme. Sze, wife of the present Chinese envoy, who wore a native costume of the richest silver and white brocade with splendid jewels, which were, however, worn American fashion. Mme. Koo, wife of the former envoy from China, was garbed in a splendid London gown of silver cloth, silver brocade and tulle.

"Murder on the Half Shell; or, Buckets of Blood," is the deliciously gruesome title of the entertainment which members of the Junior League of New York are giving this evening at the Hotel Plaza for the benefit of the Manhattanville Day and Night Nursery. Somehow, the title seems hard to connect with a nursery, but we are quite sure that the little babies are not to be murdered.

The cast of the show is made up chiefly of this season's debutantes, several of whom are well known in the Hub. The affair promises to be one of the most brilliant of the season in Gotham.

Random Notes of Society Folk in Town and Country

MISS MARION FENNO of Beacon street is to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Adams of Lawrence, L. I., tomorrow evening when the latter will give a dinner and dance at the Rockaway Hunt Club to introduce their daughter, Miss Katherine Adams, and to have their friends meet Miss Fenno.

Mrs. Augustin H. Parker of Boston, who is sojourning at Hot Springs, Va., was recently entertained at dinner by Ernest A. Thompson at the Homestead. Mrs. John C. Mallery and Baron Rosenkrantz were also present.

Miss Rosamond Bradley of Commonwealth avenue, who joined the Boston colony at Hot Springs last week, rode over the open trail with Miss Symphorion Bristed of New York. Mr. and Mrs. George H. Burnett and Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Burnett of Southboro, Mass., also at the Southern resort, drove to the Cascades and Healing Springs over the week end.

Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, well known in Boston, gave a reception on Sunday afternoon in her new apartment at No. 300 Park avenue, New York. The guests included Mrs. J. Russell Soley, Charles Oelrichs, Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. E. Clarence Jones, A. M. Bagby, T. C. Richardson, Frank Munsey, Cavaln Charles Quick and John Moffat.

The Vice-President and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge were the ranking guests at the dinner which Mrs. Marshall Field gave on Sunday evening. Admiral Lord Beatty and Lady Beatty, who are staying with Mrs. Field, were also present.

Mr. and Mrs. Lithgow Osborn of Boston have rented the Washington home of Miss Katherine Mimmick for the season. Miss Mimmick will probably spend the Winter with Mrs. Julian James of the capital.

WIFE, WHO SHOT BROTHER IN LAW, IN COURT

East Cambridge Woman Says She Killed Him After Refusing to Elope

Mrs. Marguerita Tarquinino, of East Cambridge, who shot and killed her brother-in-law rather than submit to his demand that she elope with him, pleaded not guilty to a charge of murder in the first degree when she was arraigned today in court in East Cambridge.

The widow of twenty-nine attracted considerable attention as she made the plea. She was held without bail for trial, and Richard M. Walsh was appointed by Judge Brown to act as her counsel.

Mrs. Tarquinino shot Pasquale Ranna in the kitchen of her home at No. 100 Gore street after he had attempted to force her to leave her three children and go with him, according to her story.

Ranna at first demanded the return of $350 which he had lent her some time before with which to complete the purchase of a lot, she said. She reminded him that she was to have more time to pay the debt.

He then drew $325 from his pocket and said: "You know how you can earn this if you want to."

She refused to elope with him and he peeled a larger sum of money, at the same time showing a revolver. She ordered him to leave her home.

He refused, and seizing her in his arms attempted to kiss her. She wrenched the revolver from his pocket and by an effort broke away and began ring at him.

GIRL SUES WAR SWEETHEART FOR RING

Former Betrothed Pair Tell Differing Tales of Engagement in Court

Fitchburg, Nov. 22.—A diamond ring, which Roy Bonner declares was an engagement ring and which Miss Theresa Bellsle insists was only a friendly gift, is the cause of the two former sweethearts becoming opponents in a legal fight that is now on hearing in the civil session of the Superior Court here.

Miss Bellsle is suing to recover the ring, which is valued at $285.50. She says that Bonner gave it to her last Christmas, and that when a setting came out a little later and he took it away to have it fixed he failed to return it.

Bonner tells the story a little differently. In his defense on the witness stand he asserted that the beginnings of the story lie away back in the days of the war, when he was a high private in the army at Camp Devens. In those days, he says, Miss Bellsle often came to him, frequently embracing him on the company streets, in the presence of his messmates.

As a result of these actions, he says, he naturally assumed that he and Miss Bellsle were engaged. Consequently, last year, he decided to give her the ring to seal the pact.

While the ring was being repaired, he continued, Miss Bellsle broke off the engagement. And since the engagement was broken, Bonner declared that he could see no reason for giving the girl the ring again.

BABY IS TICKET TO ANTI-BIRTH CONTROL RALLY

Unusual Church Service to Be Held in Worcester by Jesuit Priests

Worcester, Nov. 22.—A baby is a "ticket of admission" to an unusual service to be held in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock by Jesuit priests, headed by the Rev. Charles McIntyre, S. J., of Philadelphia, conducting a mission in the church.

The service will be a protest against the spirit of birth control and in announcing it, Father McIntyre states it will be a real kind of "baby show." He said it would be the most powerful sermon that could be preached against race suicide when mothers "hold up their babies to be blessed by Almighty God and dedicated to His Blessed Mother."

Catholic mothers of Worcester are urged to bring their babies to this service—in fact the youngsters are "tickets of admission." Any adult who wishes to attend must have a baby from one to six years of age as his ticket.

"Don't mind if the babies cry," said Father McIntyre, "for a baby's cry is the sweetest song that goes to heaven."

Father McIntyre wants the outside of the church to be a "baby carriage garage" and if necessary he will have police officers on hand to see that "traffic regulations" are complied with and that "the cars are properly parked."

PRIMARIES ARE HELD IN 5 BAY STATE CITIES

Somerville, Lawrence, Chelsea, Everett and Lynn All Select Candidates

Five cities of the Commonwealth held primary elections today. They were Somerville, Lawrence, Lynn, Everett and Chelsea.

From them came reports of heavy voting and intense interest in the campaign on the part of women voters, who have been throwing themselves more heartily into the political fights than ever before.

In Lawrence there was every indication of a record-breaking vote. A total of 22,543 were eligible to vote on the nominations for the city election of December 13.

Two candidates will be named for the Lawrence mayoralty contest, two for aldermen and director of public safety; two for alderman and director of public engineering and four for the School Committee.

Mayor White, a candidate for re-election, was hotly opposed by City Treasurer William A. Kelleher, former clerk of the district court; Daniel W. Mahoney, Attorney Edward M. Cannaly, William McGinnis, ex-commander of the local post, American Legion; John H. McAuliffe, newspaper reporter, and Miss Evelyn Smith, a social worker.

In Somerville the hardest primary struggle in many years came to a climax today with every indication that the people of that city would roll up a record smashing vote before the polls closed for the day.

The contest for the Republican candidate for mayor held the centre of the political stage.

Three candidates for the nomination, all of whom have made a vigorous fight, were in the running. They were Representative Warren G. Taggart, John M. Webster, former member of the Board of Aldermen, and former Alderman Eugene M. Carman. The Democratic party had but one candidate in the field, John J. Murphy. Almost as many women as men appeared at the polling places today.

The big issue of the fight was the so-called "machine," both Daggett and Webster being out to "smash the machine."

In Everett political leaders anticipated a light vote. Mayor Christopher Harrison was out for re-election, and opposing him were former Representative Fred P. Greenwood; former Mayor James Chambers and John F. Hogan, "the Boy Candidate," who passed his twenty-first birthday last September, and who will cast his first ballot for himself as mayor.

In Lynn the fight was for mayor, councilman-at-large and ward councilman. The voters in seventeen new precincts received ballots when they went to vote today from women precinct officers for the first time in the city's history.

There were five candidates for mayor, and two will have their names on the ballot at the December election. They were Mayor Walter H. Creamer, William E. Shaw, Harland S. McPherren, James F. Bagley and Frank B. Austin.

Candidates for four nominations for councilman-at-large were Francis P. O'Neil, newspaper man; William H. Cochrane, president of the City Council; Councilman Charles W. Ames, Frederick L. Twomey, secretary of the Lynn Typographical Union; Attorney John V. Phelan, world war veteran and grand knight of the Valladolid Council, K. of C.; Eben W. Sears, Jr., John R. Wallace, William A. McKenzie, Albert A. Harisborn and Seymour J. Watson.

In Chelsea the city primary attracted light attention among the voters. Former Alderman Hugh J. McLaughlin has been making a hot race for nomination as alderman-at-large.

MRS. GARDNER'S MUSEUM OPEN TO PUBLIC

Finest Private Collection of Art Treasures on View to 500 for Two Days

Giovanni Bellini's "Madonna," considered one of the most beautiful conceptions of motherhood ever put on canvas, will be one of the attractions at the exhibition in the art museum of Mrs. John L. Gardner in Fenway court today. The museum will be open from noon until 3 o'clock. Two hundred and fifty persons will be admitted.

Bellini's "Madonna," which represents the mother and a sleeping child, will be exhibited by Mrs. Gardner for the first time. It comes from the Summeringen collection and is hung in the Raphael room.

Among the new paintings to be exhibited will be Louis Kronberg's "La Guitana," and "Head of a Girl," by Arnold Sinde The latter two paintings are on view in the Tapestry and Mc-Knight rooms. The museum, believed to house the finest private collection of masterpieces in the world, will also be open tomorrow from 12 to 3. Tickets are on sale at Herrick's, Copley square.

COAST CUTTER HUNTS SECOND RUM SHIP

Acushnet Combs Buzzards Bay for Another Alleged Marine Smuggler

New Bedford, Nov. 22.—The coast guard cutter Acushnet left here for the mouth of Buzzards Bay after it had been reported in shipping circles in this city that the Bravo racket Emma and Helen was off No Man's Land making toward this port.

The Emma and Helen is owned by the Insular Trading Co., owners of the schooner Romance that was seized here Sunday with a cargo of liquor estimated at being worth between $30,000 and $35,000. The Emma and Helen is the racket on which Israel Horvits, one of the men arrested in connection with the seizure of the Romance, left this country for the Cape Verde Islands, more than three months ago.

The rum-laden schooner Romance was relieved of her cargo here by the crew of the ship. Armed custom inspectors headed by Inspector Thomas Finnigan stood by and counted the cases as they were removed. When the work of taking the liquor from the ship had been completed relays of guards kept watch on board the vessel.

Lane Quits Race for Mayor and Promises to Support Murphy

City Councillor Daniel W. Lane will not file nomination papers as a candidate for Mayor. In a letter to John R. Murphy he announces his withdrawal from the campaign and promises to support Murphy. Lane's letter to Murphy follows:

"I have decided not to stand as a candidate. I have taken this course without consultation with you and without solicitation from anyone. But some of my friends seem to think by remaining in the contest I might jeopardize your election without being certain of bringing about my own. I shall not, therefore, file nomination papers, although I have enough signatures to secure a place on the ballot.

"I am writing to assure you of my hearty and cordial support."

BOY WHO SHOT CHUM SOUGHT IN NEW YORK

Postal Card From Companion Gives Clue to Whereabouts of Runaways

A search is being conducted throughout New York city today in an effort to find thirteen-year-old Edmund Fitzgerald, who early Sunday fled from the home of his father, John F. Fitzgerald, at No. 25 Gurney street, Cambridge, after an accidental shooting Saturday in which he killed his chum, 13-year-old William Daley of No. 60 Standish street, Cambridge.

Cambridge police yesterday learned that little Edmund was not alone in his flight. A chum, Daniel E. Goodine, 11 years old, who was with him when Daley was shot, crept out of the mother's house at No. 14 Farrweather street, and followed him out into the city. His mother, Mrs. Mary Goodine, has twice received a postcard from him, telling her not to worry, as both boys "would come back some day." The card was postmarked New York city.

Young Fitzgerald had taken $60 from his father's study drawer before leaving his home, and it is believed the two youngsters have been living on this sum.

—Paine's

VALUE

Did you read this in the paper?

"ONE half the world doesn't know how the other half gets its money—but it would like to," is the comment of a leading retail advertiser who is noted for his wit.

And we are tempted to paraphrase this by remarking that various gentlemen in our line of business do not know just how Paine's can provide so many values—but would like to!

So far as the general public is concerned, however, our experience is that their watchword is not "how" but "what"—not how Paine's provides values at any time of year, but the what and where of them, and the prices.

And judging from the way many of our offerings melt away after a few days—but here we are talking shop, when all we started to do was to share the clever saying of a brother advertiser with you!

B. C. IN FINE SHAPE FOR HOLY CROSS GAME

The Boston College squad went back to the mud of Braves Field yesterday to begin its final training for the great contest with Holy Cross next Saturday. If the rainy weather continues, Cavanaugh's men will have at least the advantage over their Purple rivals in being thoroughly accustomed to the topsy-turvy of the muddy battlefield.

None of the B. C. players was incapacitated by Saturday's battering, although most of the men felt a bit sore. In tackling Casey, it was giant halfback, Tatum, Eddie Shea had one eye almost closed by Flavin's knee, but this minor injury will not keep the B. C. quarterback from practice.

Cavanaugh will pay particular attention to the right side of the B. C. line in this week's practice, as it was through there that Georgetown was successful in plunging, or getting away around the wing for two touchdowns. Tatum, Kelley and McManus ought to show improved defensive strength against Holy Cross with this week's practice. Buckley, the Purple has no backfield the equal of Georgetown's.

Holy Cross is hard at work to obtain its best form for the game Saturday. A Worcester report says that Gannon, the Purple wing footed back, will be ready to start at Boston College tomorrow. Coach Hall of Worcester Academy and former Holy Cross star, has been helping Gannon with good results. Gannon's presence in the Purple backfield is a big factor, as he is fast and a clever ground gainer. Gannon's injury has kept him out of the game for two weeks, and he has not played in scrimmage since the Georgetown game.

The B. C. practice will be held at Braves Field for the rest of the week, where Cavanaugh will be free to try out new plays and perfect old ones without the danger of being scouted. The coach has no use for the Holy Cross teams as junior. He expects that the Purple eleven will stake everything on winning the game Saturday, since a victory for Coach Cavanaugh would be a feather in his cap. The chief feature in the game in Worcester will be the playing of Jim Crowley, Notre Dame fullback. Crowley is expected to play at least half the game. Do Your Xmas Giving Early

We wish to announce to all our friends that we intend to start right in and do some tall hustling for the Boston American Christmas Basket Fund.

As you know, this fund is for the one purpose of relieving the misery of our poor unfortunate brethren.

They suffer enough during the year without being forced to spend Christmas in sorrow and dismay.

They cannot help themselves. 'Tis up to us, and that includes every person with a touch of humanity in their system to make them cheerful for one day.

A few of our readers have been kind enough to send in contributions, but we want more.

The World of Sports has enjoyed a harvest for the past few years, and this will give the members an opportunity to soften the anguish of the downtrodden.

It makes no difference what you send. Every dollar means an awful lot. Make checks to the order of the Boston American Christmas Basket Fund and forward to the Sporting Department.

FITCHBURG READY FOR INTERSECTIONAL TILT

By FRED C. LANE

Fitchburg fans, supporters, the Mayor and all the dignitaries of that city are attempting to dope out the chances on the Intersectional game that the Fitchburg High School eleven has when it will play with Proviso High of Maywood, Ill., on Saturday.

Since the addition of this Western team to the schedule of the school eleven Fitchburg has gone football mad. In the past two years that city has such a large football following that the main street merchants declared a half holiday on the Saturdays the home team played at home.

Such rapid strides has football made in that city that today the local eleven is considered one of the leading schoolboy organizations in the State. Last year a Lansburg brought the West Tech High team of Cleveland, Ohio, and the game was a success financially and otherwise. They returned the favor of the Western eleven by playing the same team on their own gridiron the middle of this season.

Previous to the 1920 season Fitchburg was given little consideration by the leaders of the scholastic circle of that time. Because of the fine record the team has made in the past two years all eyes have been centered on the outcome of their games played this Fall.

The Fitchburg team has suffered defeat on two or three occasions, but each time such medicine was not administered without the utmost sort of fight. The last three games have all been won by Fitchburg against such teams as Lowell, B. C. High and Manchester High.

On Saturday Fitchburg will take part in one of the two intersectional games scheduled for those parts. Proviso High was originally scheduled to play Mechanic Arts High in Boston but backed out on account of the latter school to pass up the game. Fitchburg officials were quick to grasp the opportunity to play two out-of-State teams in one season, and signed Proviso High for November 26.

Much is expected of the fighting backfield which is made up of Joe Shea, fullback, Captain Tarpey, halfback; Pelletier, halfback, and Hobbs quarterback. This quartette uses the aerial game wonderfully well. In addition Tarpey and Hobbs are two fast running backs.

YEAST ACTS QUICKER WHEN TAKEN WITH IRON

Thousands Now Take Ironized Yeast Tablets to Build New Health, Strength, Energy and Weight.

Often Brings Results in Half the Usual Time.

Thousands of people who were formerly dull, weak, nervous, run-down or languid, have seemingly taken a new lease on life since Science discovered that the health-giving, energy-producing elements called "vitamines" were contained in great quantities in Yeast.

But to help bring more quickly and more thoroughly the added flesh, the soothed nerves, the strengthened muscles, the clear skin and the wonderful energy, the blood must be enriched also.

That is why Science has combined Yeast with organic or vegetable iron, the most easily assimilated form of iron such as is found in limited quantities in Spinach and Raisins.

The name of this effective combination of tonics is Ironized Yeast. In this form, Yeast becomes a perfect tonic and re-vitalizer—and often accomplishes its results in HALF THE USUAL TIME.

Ironized Yeast keeps indefinitely and costs about the same per dose as common yeast, but is much more effective. Each package contains 10 days' treatment and costs only a dollar, or just 10c a day. Special directions for children in each package. Sold at good druggists everywhere. Made by the Ironized Yeast Company, Atlanta, Ga.

B. U. MEDALS FOR MAJOR SPORTS

Gold, Silver and Bronze Prizes Will Be Awarded to Winners by Council

It has been voted by the Boston University Athletic Council to give bronze, silver and gold medals to winners in major sports at the university. Conditions for the awards are very strict.

Medals will be awarded only to those who win major sport insignia during the academic year which usually ends with their graduation, except that in the academic years 1921-22 and 1922-23, juniors at the College of Business Administration will be eligible for medal awards.

The bronze medal will be given to winners of insignia in an earlier year in the same major sport as that in which award is made in the senior year.

The silver medal will be awarded to winners of insignia in two earlier years in the same major sport as that in which award is made in the senior year; or, to winners of insignia in an earlier year in a major sport other than that in which award is made in the senior year.

The gold medal will be given to winners of insignia in three earlier years in the same major sport as that in which award is made in the senior year; or, to winners of insignia in two earlier years one or both awards in sports other than that in which award is made in the senior year; or, to winners of insignia in the same year major sport in two years previous to the senior year, with one year as team captain in that sport.

At the discretion of the Athletic Council, either medal may be awarded to any student for unusually meritorious performance, not specifically provided for in the above conditions of award. But such performances should be made to appear before the Council.

NAVY PLAYERS SHIFTED FOR ARMY CONTEST

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 22.—That all is not right with the Naval Academy football team, which started this season so finely, defeating Princeton and all other opponents only to be stopped by Pennsylvania State last Saturday, is evident from the eleventh hour changes in the team, two regulars supposed to be most firmly established in their places giving way to others. However, the action is in pursuance of the long established policy at the Naval Academy of considering nothing but actual playing ability in the selection of teams.

With the changes made during the present week, three players who were regular varsity men last year and who played in the Washington game against the Army, have been displaced by players who were available last year but who have, in the opinion of Coach Folwell, gone ahead of their rivals this season.

All three of the new regular players are uninjured and may be called yet to take part in the final battle.

These lads who were members of last year's class, McKee, Noyes and Barchet showed promise of considerable backfield ability.

McKee, however, was chosen from the trio as a regular back, Noyes and Barchet being substitutes.

Barchet showed such improvement this year that by the time the date of the Princeton game came in October, he was practically a regular in the place held by McKee, and his work in that and subsequent games has been such that he is recognized as one of the best backs of the year.

Bolles, regular halfback last season and the greatest of the new players, is out with a broken collar bone, received in the Penn State game when the latter retired for a time and substituted. Bolles on the other hand, is a star when king returned to the game. He did so well that Folwell felt that he should be given further opportunities. He has been playing at left tackle in all the practices of this week, and will probably start against the Army.

At the present writing, it sounds best than Bates. Wyeth is out at last and has had more experience, though not starting in so many big games. For three seasons he has been playing such good football that it was largely owing to his work that Navy defeated Princeton. He has been a regular since the middle of the season of 1919, when he was injured in the Penn game. He has been playing at left tackle in all the practices of this week, and will probably start against the Army.

Weighing about 200 pounds less than Bates, Wyeth is fast as an ox

FINANCE AND BUSINESS

By B. C. FORBES

No Morgan or Rockefeller or Harriman or Vanderbilt ever occupied so dominating a position in this country as Hugo Stinnes occupies in Germany today. He is more than an industrial Bismarck. He is rapidly becoming a veritable financial, industrial, transportation, mining, publishing, etc., Napoleon.

His present visit to London is regarded abroad as of equal importance to the Reparation Commission's visit to Berlin.

If Germany succeeds in meeting her January indemnity payment of 500,000,000 gold marks, it probably will be through the active assistance of Stinnes. Stinnes is a hard bargainer. Sentiment forms no part of his makeup. He is out for Hugo Stinnes first, last and all the time. He looks for profit in every deal, every industrial power within Germany, and for greater international power than ever was wielded by any human being. Although he has penetrated various nearby countries, as well as Spain and Italy, and even South America, his biggest goal is Russia. He sees unlimited possibilities for development and for profit there.

When the present German government approached Stinnes for cooperation in raising four billion marks to meet indemnity payments and suggested a stiff levy on all capital, Stinnes protested that the plan under which provided that the government give up control of all the state-owned or operated railroads, placing them within control of private business interests—which would have actually meant Stinnes—the government authorities did not dare consent to such a plan. Tremendous opposition developed against the plan, a nationwide strike of railway and other workers was threatened.

Having been blocked in this scheme, it is not yet known what Stinnes will next propose. Apparently the Reparations Commission has decided to insist upon payment of the last installment of the settlement, but Stinnes and other German capitalists have no desire to place Germany at either the mercy of France and other ex-enemies by failing to live up to the peace terms. Consequently the latest opinion is that business interests will cooperate with the government in formulating a plan to provide the necessary funds.

Instead of consenting to the imposition of a heavy tax upon their own wealth, it is likely that the shrewd traders will concoct some government loan to be floated largely for by the people of Germany. It is even possible that efforts will be made to float a loan in the United States, although the prospects for such financing are the reverse of bright, because of the demoralized state of German finance and currency.

This demoralization is rapidly going from bad to worse. The latest weekly official statement shows further expansion of 2,500,000 marks in paper currency, raising the grand total to the enormous 100,000,000,000. Such financial methods can end only in disaster.

Incidentally, any misguided Americans who have bought German marks or German bonds, state or municipal, in the belief that a rise would some day return to its pre-war value of 24 cents in American money, should take serious note of what is happening to Germany's paper currency and cease cherishing delusions.

If you put a fly into a bottle filled with oxygen, that fly will have a glorious, delirious time for a little while. Then it will collapse, dead.

The German people have been having a similar experience financially since the country became filled to overflowing with paper money. Most classes are rich beyond all their dreams when they measure their wealth by the number of marks they can earn and when they think of the mark of today as they thought of the mark in pre-war days.

Dividend-paying German stocks, for example, have been worth seven or eight times the price of what they were two years ago. Wages are eight to ten times what they were in 1914. The textile mill worker who got a half mark an hour before the war can get between five and six marks an hour; the worker in rubber factories has jumped from half a mark to between six and seven marks an hour.

Meanwhile, the cost of living has multiplied anywhere from fifteen to twenty times the pre-war cost, so that German workers are distinctly worse off than they were before the Kaiser brought on Armageddon.

America and other countries have very much less to fear from German competition than from the German catastrophe, being content

Pullman Proposal

Pullman Co. stockholders are to hold a special meeting in Chicago on December 20 in connection with the proposed Haskell & Barker merger. It is proposed that they sanction an increase of capital stock from 1,200,000 shares of $100 par value to 1,350,000, and an amendment of the charter so as to increase directors from nine to twelve. They also are asked to authorize directors to purchase from Haskell & Barker Car Co., Inc., and to pay therefor $2?,000 in cash and 600 shares of the capital stock of Pullman Co.

Wall Street Briefs

The Lawyers Bond & Mortgage Co. of City stated has been organized with $1 000 000 capital.

Interest, instalment and call orders placed with leading railroads aggregated over $25,000,000 and constitute the largest single item in the unfilled orders of steel companies.

Standard Oil cash dividends for the last quarter of the current year aggregate $25,-126,327 as compared with $27,009,222 in the three months and with $31,861,524 in the last quarter of 1920.

It is reported in London that a 6 per Cent. Union of South Africa 5 per cent. loan, redeemable in from 10 to 20 years, is being underwritten there at 96½.

On January 1 the International Bank of St. Louis will pay a dividend of 3 per cent. and make the Franklin Bank and Mutual Bank will pay a stock dividend of 50 2-3 per cent.

The $25,000,000 Consolidated Coal Co. 20-year 7 per cent. notes have all been sold.

The number of persons employed in the steel industry is nearly 30 per cent. less than a year ago.

STEELS RECEDE WHILE OILS ARE HEAVY

Prices Range Narrow in an Active Market; No Feature to Morning Trading

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were weak in New York at noon, failing to rally in the second hour. Steels figured in the recessional, while oils were heavy. There was not much business in rails, motors or coppers. The price range was narrow, both gains and losses ruling small. Among weakest issues were Crucible, Baldwin, United Drug and Mexican Petroleum. They were off a point or more at their lowest.

Strongest issues included Reading, Gulf States Steel and Invincible. They were up from fractions to nearly three points at the end of the forenoon. Gulf States Steel made the largest gain. Trading was active, morning transactions approximating 350,000 shares. Call money opened at 5 per cent. Foreign exchange was weak, demand sterling starting at $3.98.

OILS WERE LEADERS.

Low-priced oils were the most active group during the first hour or so of irregular market. Selling developed at the opening, but averaged small. Profit-taking was apparent at once and there was a slight reaction. Within thirty minutes the list was on a little lower level. Pierce Oil and Burns Brothers sold at year highs quickly, but the former lost all of the advance and more and the latter sold off a point from extreme. Invincible was the most active and one of the strongest petroleums. California Petroleum made a substantial gain. Gulf States Steel also was the most, being up about five points before mid-morning. Dealings in this issue were on an unusually large scale. Mexican Petroleum was the only active specialty to yield. Studebaker and Reading was the leader among rails. Coppers, tires and motors were quiet and narrow in movement. Steels were heavy, with Bethlehem B the weakest. Pullman sagged following the proposal to issue 150 000 shares of stock in connection with the Haskell & Barker merger.

MARKET MARKING TIME.

The market is marking time just at present. Bear operators are offering sturdy opposition to the oil issues which got under way over the week-end, and some astute speculators are of the opinion that there is likely to be a forward spurt, if not something of a reaction. The permanent confidence which is the situation that will make for business stability is generally believed. Trade improvement is necessary for a prolonged bull movement. While the money situation is pronounced satisfactory and ought to stimulate commerce and industry, mercantile and manufacturing activities are slow to normal and no great improvement is expected in either this Winter. Convalescence is being retarded by delay in the settlement of taxation and tariff questions. Both must be adjusted in some spirit of equity before there can be a broad foundation for prosperity.

Dividend Declarations

Lehigh & Willkesbarre Coal Company declared a dividend of $35 per share, payable December 20, to stock of record December 15.

Portable Steel Co. declared quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent. on the preferred stock, payable December 31, to stock of record December 12.

J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. declared quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent. on the preferred, payable January 1 to stock of record Dec. 12.

Pullman Co. declared quarterly dividend of $2 per share on the common and semi-annual dividend of $3 per share on the preferred, payable December 31 to stock of record Dec. 12.

American Acceptance Co. declared quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent. on the preferred, payable Dec. 22, stock of record December 15.

Pullman Co. declared quarterly dividend of $2 per share on the common and semi-annual dividend of $3 per share on the preferred, payable December 31 to stock of record December 12

TITLES OF TWO TEST PICTURES MADE KNOWN

Correct Answers Revealed Because of Oversight on Part of Artist

On the chance that here and there is participant in the Boston American's $5,000 Book Title Picture Test may not have seen yesterday's statement, the Test Editor will say again that the Correct Title of Test Picture No. 1 is "Robinson Crusoe," and the Correct Title of Test Picture No. 8 "Rip Van Winkle."

Why are these titles printed? Because, with respect to them, the artist completely lost sight of the pledge of the Boston American that the Test Drawings illustrate titles ONLY and have nothing whatever to do with CONTENTS of books.

It may be said that practically everybody is familiar with the characters in question; but this, if true, would not alter the fact. The Test is a Book TITLE Test. The drawings represent TITLES. You should be able to "spot" the Correct Title of each drawing, when the title appears in the List of Titles, even if you never heard of the book.

The Test Editor desires to express his gratitude to the many contestants who called his attention to the pictures in question.

ONLY TITLES ILLUSTRATED.

Every Test Picture, it may be said again, will illustrate the TITLE of a book. It is NOT necessary to know anything about the story in order to get the Correct Title.

The Book Test will consist of 60 drawings, each drawing standing for the title of a book. With the Test Drawing, every day, there will be printed a List of Titles, and that list will be the Correct Title of the day's drawing. One title in the list will fit the picture better than any other title in the list. THAT title will be the Correct Title.

Every reader of the Boston American who resides in New England or Canada is eligible to the Book Test. It is not necessary to register or enroll. The way to begin is to begin.

Test Pictures and Correct Titles must not be sent in before the close of the Test. Send nothing in before you have seen Picture No. 60. With that drawing you will receive complete instruction as to mailing, time limit, and so on.

LIVE AND LEARN.

The List of Titles is as much a part of the Test as the Drawing. It is a question whether one is more important than the other. Here, in the first quarter of the Test, the artist is on his good behavior. The titles are obvious, easy. Do not let this blind you to the importance of knowing what's what in the List of Titles. This is a test, as has been said so many times before, for those who read books and their meanings. Words are peculiar animals. We discovered, in a previous test, that some of the meanings of the word "lake" is "pit." Up to the day when Mr. Artist produced his dictionary quotation for "lake" the writer would have sworn that you could not have a lake without water. We live and learn.

So mind the List of Titles. Particularly, a little later on. Know what is in it. Take nothing for granted.

To those who make the highest scores in this competition the Boston American will pay some rich rewards. Those are the cash prizes which will be paid to the 219 readers who, at the close of the Test, send in the largest number of Correct Titles:

One First Award	$1,000
One Second Award	750
One Third Award	500
One Fourth Award	400
One Fifth Award	300
One Sixth Award	200
One Seventh Award	150
One Eighth Award	100
One Ninth Award	50
100 Awards of $5 each	500
Total	$5,000

COMPETITION NOT EASY.

It is not an "easy" competition. No one, when the sixty-day march is over, will refer to it as the "softest thing that ever happened." The rewards ARE rich. One Thousand Dollars IS a beautiful prize. But they will not be decided by luck, or chance, or favoritism. They are going to be earned by finding, writing and sending in the CORRECT Titles of the pictures. It CAN be done. It WILL be done. The $5,000 must be won.

If you happen to miss a Test Picture or two, remember that, under the rules, you are permitted to send in copies of them. These copies can be made easily by using tracing paper. Surely you have a friend or two following the Test. Borrow the Test Picture you need and trace a good copy of it. Such copies will be received without question, as part of your set of pictures.

On the other hand, why should you miss one of the printed copies? All you have to do is place a standing order with your newsdealer, letting him know that you are following the Book Test and MUST have the Boston American regularly.

Back numbers of the paper cannot be supplied from this office. We do not have them. Give the dealer his sixty-day order and be happy.

Don't forget the importance of the daily List of Titles!

Another Test Drawing tomorrow.

SALVATIONISTS RUSH HOLIDAY DINNER PLANS

Prepare to Feed Unfortunate Children on Thanksgiving in Ford Hall

With the approach of Thanksgiving Salvation Army headquarters, No. 8 East Brookline street, South End, is rushing preparations for the annual holiday dinner for Boston's poor and unfortunate children who look forward to this feast as one of the delights of their lives.

Under the direction of Mrs. Colonel W. A. McIntyre, provincial relief officer, and Staff-Captain Frederick D. Hoffner in charge of the dinner arrangements, are loaded with letters from hospital officials, physicians, ministers and others, all pleading for relief for unfortunate ones of all ages searching for relief.

Mrs. McIntyre and her assistants are hastening to investigate the worthiness of each application. Every request for aid that is found is funds are available. Out of the number will be selected nearly 2,000 children, boys and girls up to 16 years of age, who will take their places at tables in Ford Hall, where the dinner will be given this year.

Colonel W. A. McIntyre, New England commander of the Salvation Army, will preside. He has invited Mayor Peters to deliver a brief talk.

MISFORTUNES MULTIPLY FOR PORTLAND FAMILY

Portland, Me., Nov. 22.—Many people will have better apparent cause for Thanksgiving than the family of Joseph Curran of No. 116 Forest avenue. Joseph, their seven-year-old son, lies at the point of death at the Maine General Hospital as a result of being hit by an automobile today. Two other children returned from the Children's Hospital yesterday after undergoing operations, and other youthful members of the family are threatening with pneumonia.

Let Our Statesmen Follow Great Leaders of the Past

The great English historian, Lingard, in his ten-volume narrative of the rise of England to power and dominion, gives two reasons for that rise.

One, he says, was the spirit of commercial enterprise, first carefully fostered by Queen Elizabeth, her Nobles and rich Commoners and their successors.

The other, he says—but let us have Lingard's own words:

The other cause may be discovered in the system of foreign policy adopted by the ministers; a policy, indeed, which it may be difficult to reconcile with honesty and good faith, but which, in the result, proved eminently successful. They were perpetually on the watch to sow the seeds of dissension, to foment the spirit of resistance, and to aid the efforts of rebellion in neighboring nations. In Scotland the authority of the crown was almost annihilated; France was reduced to an unexampled state of anarchy, poverty and distress; and Spain beheld with dismay her wealth continually absorbed and her armies perishing among the dikes and sandbanks of the low countries.

The depression of these powers, if not a positive, was a relative benefit. As other princes descended the English queen appeared to rise on the scale of reputation and power.

The English historian is describing events 300 years ago. Yet his description exactly fits the events of our own times.

The government of George V. has been even more successful than Queen Elizabeth's ministers were in pursuing the same policy.

The "authority of the crown has been annihilated" in three great empires. Russia has "been reduced to an unexampled state of anarchy, poverty and distress," while Germany has "beheld with dismay her wealth absorbed and her armies perishing among the dikes and sandbanks" of Flanders and in the trenches beyond the border.

And just as England after each successive destruction of her chief rival rested and renewed her strength for the next contest, so she is resting now while making new combinations.

Language is used by diplomatists to conceal thought and purposes. Ten years ago every British statesman said war with Germany was unthinkable, but at that very time the farsighted British statesmen were secretly directing the English Navy and the English Expeditionary Forces to prepare plans to assist Russia and France in the destruction of England's most formidable naval and commercial rival.

The present Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, and the present chief British spokesman at the Washington conference, Mr. Arthur Balfour, used almost the same words in speaking to Germany in 1912 that they are now using in speaking to America in 1921—almost the identical words.

We do not impugn the veracity of the eminent statesmen. We do not criticize them. They were and are faithful representatives of the policy of England. That policy does not change. It follows the plans and precedents of former great leaders when those plans have proved successful. And the plan has always been to make combinations with other nations to destroy Great Britain's chief rival.

We ardently hope our own statesmen at Washington will have intelligence enough to follow the precedents and policies of our great leaders when those policies have proved successful. For 140 years we have prospered and grown immeasurably, incomparably under the injunctions of Washington to keep free from foreign wars and foreign alliances, to deal justly with all nations, but to keep ourselves strong and independent.

Our own common sense ought to teach us that our country is safe only so long as we maintain a powerful naval defence, which no hostile combination will dare to try to break through.

That is the right American policy.

Roosevelt said it all:

Walk softly, and carry a big stick.

The European and Asiatic diplomacies want us to walk softly and throw away our big stick.

They seem to have the ear of the administration at Washington, but we feel serenely confident that they will not have the ear of the American people when this momentous issue is carried in the final appeal to the ballot boxes of the republic.

Let Us Keep the Submarine

We Should Not Give Up the Use of This Not Uncivilized Weapon at England's Demand

If there is any statesmanship and patriotism at Washington we shall not yield to Great Britain's demand that the use of submarines in warfare shall be outlawed.

The submarine is not an uncivilized weapon. It is not nearly so barbarous and uncivilized as bombing from aeroplane unprotected towns. Yet Great Britain wishes to preserve this method of waging war. The submarine does not destroy women and children who do not unnecessarily put themselves in the way of danger. In war women and children do not have to go upon the seas, but they must live, and they must live above the ground, and there is nowhere above the ground that a bomb hurled from an aeroplane cannot reach them. There are many vital reasons why our government should hold its position in favor of maintaining the submarine as a weapon of war. The greatest danger of a submarine is to the big imperialistic bully. The submarine is a splendid weapon for both the just and the small nation. It helps the just and little nations on an equality in naval power, and it makes the big naval bully mighty careful how he goes to war, for the commercial interests which control these imperialistic countries and generally push them into unjust wars will never forget the destruction of the merchant marine by the German underwater craft. The best preventive of war is the continuance of the existence of a condition which makes the big-business interests of a country afraid to go to war. If it is an unjust war, if it is an aggressive war, only those who will profit by it will want it, and they are always the big-business interests. Now if the destruction of ships and freight which can be caused by the submarines of a small nation is so great that the business interests of a country are afraid to have their country go to war, there will be so much less danger of an aggressive, offensive, unjust war. Give the little nation and the just nation more power and you stop the imperialism of the big bullies.

The submarine also will tend to lift the burden of big, permanent armaments on the seas. A deadly number of submarines could be maintained without great expense, and a still more deadly number could be turned out about as fast as Ford automobiles. With the submarine the bullying by the great naval powers which has oppressed the world for a hundred and fifty years will become more and more difficult. We ourselves by the submarine can one could almost find guarantee of safety.

Let us keep the submarines.

LIABILITY OR ASSET; WHICH IS JAPAN?

Ironic Humor and Pathos in the Position of Nippon, Says Mrs. Rinehart—She Is the Child of Old European Methods Married to a Young Yellow Wife and Is Today an Orphan

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Written expressly for Universal Service

Copyright, 1921, by Universal Service, Inc.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—It is increasingly apparent that the mine set off by Mr. Hughes was located directly underneath certain Japanese ambitions, and that a number of considerably outlined plans are just now in hospital at the Shoreham Hotel.

Nevertheless, there is a certain rude humor and pathos in the situation of Japan at this time. For to change the figure, modern Japan is the child of old fashioned methods married to a young yellow wife, and is today an orphan.

More than that. Her former friends and relatives of the Quai D'Orsay, Downing street and the Wilhelmstrasse have educated her and then abandoned her, to adapt a strange new white child called "peace."

Nevertheless, if Japan, too, has a sense of humor, she must occasionally smile just now at the virtuous air with which her teacher-nations of the past are holding her forget what they have taught her. She has been the star pupil of militaristic Europe and because she has moved toward the head of the class, the teachers see that they have taught her too well.

Imitated Europe

For whatever her past, Japan's modern militarism is purely acquired. She has imitated European war methods as she imitates Swedish matches, only, rather better, for her matches are poor, and is, like pre-war Europe, militaristic, not because she loves to fight, but for what she can get out of fighting. It is an unfortunate fact for the rest of the world that while Europe has learned that no spoils of victory can pay the cost of war, Japan has paid comparatively little and has stood to win a great deal.

But long before the great war, Japan could truthfully sing to Europe, "You Made Me What I Am Today." Her first contact with Western civilization were the black ships, as she called them, European battleships. From the beginning of Japan's world intercourse the Japanese people themselves were given a visualization of the armed power of the rest of the world. Battleships came to her harbors, and their guns shone against the skyline. Nations made parade of their power, and sent flotillas of dreadnoughts. It was clear to Japan that unless one had a navy and an army, one was nobody — like a family owning a piano. That it could not afford the piano nor pay the installments on it, for the eight-eight program was too expensive, was subsidiary matter.

But she saw, as a matter of fact, that there were other methods by which Europe obtained some of the things she wanted. She saw that, having the piano and the property it implied, it was possible to borrow a lawnmower and other things, and that considerable rather profitable borrowing was being done.

She saw that between 1913 and 1918 the Russians, French, Belgians and British had obtained railway concessions in China; the American Standard Oil had secured oil concessions there, and an American corporation had acquired a great railway building privilege. And that England was claiming a sphere of influence in China of 362,000 square miles.

And Japan did not see particularly why China should lend around the corner when her next-door neighbor needed many things.

But Japan was new to the game, and the slow and devious methods of Europe were too like the master of deception which she was eager to throw off. The possibilities opened up to her in the world also had just discovered went to her head, and she became drunk with power. The same rapidity which today places China on sale to the highest bidder drove her to overreaching. She armed too obviously and took too little trouble to conceal her designs.

Things worked for her at first. The opening of the long closed door of the East had destroyed the old patriarchical government in China and given nothing in its place. China was thus left defenceless. At the same time the Japanese, more adaptable, more shrewd and more willing for contact with the West and for change, had developed a working system which compromised the old regime with the new, and which although not entirely satisfactory, satisfied the requirements of the moment.

Playing into their hands, as it had played into the hands of other nations before them, was the fact that the Chinese while individually honest were politically corrupt, and also the belief that, given a sufficient state of turmoil in a country, that country's nearest neighbor acquires the moral right to step in and stabilize it, for a consideration.

Just how much of the disorder in China may be traced to Japan is an open question. It is claimed, behind closed doors, that Japan has financed at least one of the contending armies; those armies are now looting and pillaging their own country. Whether this is true or not, Japan had learned from Germany the value of promoting trouble, as well as Germany's part in the China-Japanese war, and certainly she has done nothing to pacify China.

But Japan came to the peace table of Paris the world with one great hope. She wanted gain, if gain could be had, and she was willing to accept gratitude for what she had done, which was not a great deal, but was more than she had promised. But what she wanted almost wistfully was a recognition of equality, and her protest against the color line was ignored. As a matter of expediency, the failure of that protest was a mistake. What has happened is, that to her physical requirements demanding that she have room to expand Japanese psychology has now added the demand that she be recognized as an equal. Failing this recognition, it is not unlikely that she will eventually endeavor to impose her equality by force, agreements on disarmament notwithstanding.

Not so much that this recognition would bring peace, as that it might avoid a future war, is an argument for it. Back of all the ever-reaching increasing armament and overassumption of authority in the Far East is but has made Japan an object of fear and suspicion has lain and still lies her solution of the white man's claim to racial supremacy.

That, and her physical needs.

It is possible to deny her claim to equality. It is right and needful to curtail her dream of self aggrandizement at the expense of other nations. But in the interests of peace it is absolutely necessary to face the problem of room for her enormous and increasing population.

The peaceful penetration method has worked out very badly for Japan. The experiment has, it is true, not been extensively tried, for less than three million Japanese have been scattered outside of Japan in the last fifty years. But certain curious discoveries have followed that experiment. One is that the Japanese laborer cannot compete successfully with the other yellow races. Scales of living and standards of labor being the same, he fails, as witness what has happened in Hawaii.

Where the standards of living are higher, as among the whites, he is not even compete successfully. His personal demands are fewer, and his hours of labor, if he is working for himself, are longer. He is apt to prosper at the expense of a community, and at the same time give that community nothing in return. For he is first, last and always a Japanese. He may assume citizenship, but his real fealty is always to Japan.

Economic and Protective

As an economic and protective measure, therefore, has been evolved an exclusion principle which solves the white man's problem, but closes to the Japanese the door of profitable western immigration.

Thus dies Japan's hope of expansion by immigration, while at the same time she faces a population of three hundred and eighty to the square mile. To ignore this situation, not to attempt to clear it, will be to provide for a spontaneous explosion in the future, which may make negligible all the work of this conference.

Any program dealing with the Far East must take cognizance, first of Japan's demands, but of her needs. If, as her enemies declare, she is headed toward a campaign of world-conquering, population-pressure is a peg o., which to hang her ambitions and her preparations—the Germans wanted a place in the sun.

But if, as she declares, her intentions are , opportable, and she would enjoy disarmament and beget a dove sitting on an olive branch and smiling at grief—then we must very gravely and as generously consider that if Japan is a problem to the world she is also a problem to herself, and help her to solve the problem.

She has already found that China is not her business alone, but the world's. She is now to find that no nation, Japan or any other, is its own business, but the world's. But she must also recognize that the world lives by peace and not by war, and that she is, perhaps, not so important as she thinks she is, but still important enough to deserve careful and considerate handling.

LOYALTY IN BUSINESS

Often employers do not fully realize the value of an employe to the business, aside from what he produces while in the plant or office.

There is a certain class of men which gives a stronger, more reliable tone to the business, for on all occasions a member of his class expresses loyalty for his employer and the business.

A man of this sort is on the outlook for what may benefit every department, and his tips during the year are of great value.

He stands as a bulwark between his employers and the public and when the business or production is criticised he does not hesitate to uphold both of them, though it may add to his personal unpopularity.

The value of a man of this sort cannot be measured in money.

He does not figure his own value from a money basis; the size of his pay envelope has no effect on the number of hours he puts in for the firm.

How loyal are you to the man and the business which employs you?

HOUSEWORK MONOTONY DRIVES HER "WILD"

MRS. PETTIBONE is a pretty little woman with crinkly dark brown hair, brown eyes and red cheeks. She looks a little worn and sometimes she complains—and then thin lines appear upon her face and she looks like a grieved child.

One day I called to see Mrs. Pettibone, and also to get a closerange look at her splendid petunias which bloom all Winter, without ceasing, from October to March. Somehow, Mrs. Pettibone keeps up the blooming, plants, and though we all envy her we fail to get any such results.

And Mrs. Pettibone sat down and told me the complaint she has to make against the world. The sum and substance of it all was housework, and the monotony of it.

"You have heard the story of the man who made away with himself and left a note saying it was the monotony of lacing his shoes every day which had driven him to distraction?"

"Yes," I admitted, "the tale was in one of my old reading books. But I had never thought it funny, though it was supposed to be of a humorous cast."

You've Heard This Before.

Mrs. Pettibone looked solemnly at me and said:

"No, it wasn't funny, whether it was true or not. I myself am tired to death, and of something in which there is surely more variety than in shoe lacing. But my daily task takes up hours instead of minutes and is never done for more than a few hours either.

"The monotony of housework! It is true there is a change in cooking, but the worst of housework is the cleaning up, the washing of dishes and the bed-making. What a trial is this ever recurring making of beds! Someone told me when I was a young girl that nothing was better for the figure than the making of beds. The bending and the exercising of the back was said to be splendid for the figure. Sweeping, too, was highly recommended for the same reason, and I believe there is something in the theory.

"But it goes on too long. I could endure it for one year or for five, but like the famous brook, it goes on forever."

I said it was too bad, or something of the sort, and Mrs. Pettibone felt better and made some tea and brought out some of her own cookies and we talked of the new fashions and looked over her plants, and talked of their chances for the Winter—and when I was ready to go Mrs. Pettibone took out her little motor car and drove me home around by the park.

Never a Thought of Others

And then, when I had time, I thought about Mrs. Pettibone and women like her, women who have a good bit of work to do every day at home—and it was hard for me to feel very sorry for these good housewives. Because I have seen so many women and girls who really have monotonous, unchanging, uninteresting routine day after day from year round—the kind of work, too, which does not seem to count for much good, for comfort or for joy, to anyone in their own family or anywhere.

Long hours in mills and factories—endless hours in stores and offices doing routine work which does not seem to be appreciated by anyone. But these girls and women know life and take pride in doing their work well, in their own neat, pleasing appearance and in the companionship of others like themselves — hard-working girls and women busy from morning till night.

Talk about monotony, dear Mrs. Pettibone. These girls and women of the office and factory could give you lessons which you would do well to pay for.

There is a wild joy in housework, judging it for its capacity of relief from monotony. You can change your menus every day, and change your dishes so you won't tire of seeing them three times a day. And as for the bed that can be made in five minutes or three—and a way to see how much time it takes would be to watch the clock while you are doing the work, and that would relieve the stupidity somewhat.

Really I cannot feel very sympathetic toward Mrs. Pettibone. I ought, I know, to give her a sympathizing love but I can't do it.

But I love her and her petunias and her cookies, just the same.

YOU SHOULD KEEP UP COURAGE TO LIVE

By Dr. Charles Fleischer

THOUGH you have not tried both—as far as you know—probably you are ready to agree that it takes more courage to live than to die. At least, theoretically!

It is a grim subject on which to speak in even partial jest, and one which it is pleasanter to ponder in theory than in experimentation.

Too many millions, these past ten years, have had the experiment and the experience forced upon them by participation in the war. And, since then, as many millions of other human beings, by almost equally relentless famine in Russia, China, Hungary and elsewhere.

Again, it is one thing to be brought involuntarily face to face with death, as by war and famine, and quite another matter deliberately and suddenly to end one's life voluntarily.

There is no denying that it does take a certain courage to kill yourself. But it is a momentary courage which is nothing more than the flicker of the low flame of cowardice.

Obviously, only those who have lost the courage to live will care to exhibit the brief courage to engage in self-killing.

Instances are not uncommon of sea captains, whose vessels have foundered, whether through their own fault or through unavoidable misfortune, who could not bear to survive their ships and who have, therefore, committed suicide.

From Disease

Also, one reads frequently of persons suffering from incurable and exceedingly painful disease, who "end it all by performing the happy despatch."

Only lately, Mr. Brisbane, watchful and wise interpreter of news, large and little, reported the suicide of a Canadian clergyman. The man's shoulder was broken. He was one hundred and fifty miles from a railroad. His agony was excruciating. A well-aimed shot did the rest!

Mr Brisbane asked us whether we approved of the minister's deed. Did you?

Often, a cold-blooded murderer or a person in an insane fit of jealousy will kill another and then himself. Again, the despised lover, or the happily married, for whom life has lost its meaning with the death of the beloved, or those who seek to expiate sin in suicide, or others who cannot bear to face disgrace, or some who have been worn to deadly weakness by wearying worry, will thus count the relief of death.

What do you think of it all? If you are honest you will say you understand, you sympathize, and you are sorry for all these—weaklings!

If your judgment is as healthy as humanity's normal instinct, you will also say that every suicide is the sinful symbol of essential cowardice.

Rightly, society has stamped the seal of disapproval on this craven act, by punishing the mere attempt at suicide as a crime.

We want you encouraged to stay with us and to draw on the reservoir of our common strength!

A gruesome subject, on which each of us must have his own definite, strong and wholesome conviction. And for decidedly practical reasons.

These have been, and, for a while longer, they will continue to be the most trying times which all those now living will ever be called upon to endure and master. Literally, they try men's souls!

Suicides Increase

Suicides have measurably increased. You hear an amazing amount of desperate talk from usually brave persons. Which indicates that they have nearly lost the courage to live.

The far-spread unemployment, with its menace of mingled and of suffering, and the threatening failure of very many business enterprises and to the indigo atmosphere which pervades our country as a haunting aftermath of the war.

Now it would be easy for many more millions to die. Perhaps now the nearly hopeless world would welcome, welcome with some friendly comet which might mercifully end the career of our sick planet.

How foolish for us to lose our grip of life! We have sinned frightfully as a race! We have, while you are doing the world, made a crazy attempt at suicide. We have disorganized international relations and almost destroyed the structure of society!

But the spirit of the phoenix is strong in the race. We shall rise triumphant from the ashes of the conflagration kindled by our own mad folly. We shall rebuild, and recreate, and move on towards a mastery of our fate—as individuals and collectively!

Come, you, and you, summon your reserves of courage! Manifest unconquerable determination! Radiate strength!

Put zest into your work and joy into your play; and fill the atmosphere with life and life—and still more life!

Thus, in democratic fashion—each for all and all for each—you may do your share to save the race!
